LITTLE BOY BLUE.

The little toy dog is covered with dust,
But sturdy and stanch he stands;
And the little toy soldier is red with rust,
And his musket moulds in his hands.
Time was when the little toy dog was new
And the soldier was passing fair,
And that was the time when our Little Boy Blue
Kissed them and put them there.

"Now, don't you go till I come," he said,
"And don't you make any noise."
So toddling off to his trundle bed
He dreamt of the pretty toys.
And as he was dreaming an angel song
Awakened our Little Boy Blue—
Oh, the years are many, the years are long,
But the toy friends are true.

Aye, faithful to Little Boy Blue they stand,
Each in the same old place,
Awaiting the touch of a little hand,
The smile of a little face.
And they wonder, as waiting these long years through,
In the dust of that little chair,
What has become of our Little Boy Blue
Since he kissed and put them there.

AT THE PLAY.

"HOW funny to be here with you!" said she.

He started. The phrase jarred him; it was at once inapplicable and undignified. He turned to her with a pained expression. "Delightful," "perfect," "entertaining"—he could have condoned expressions such as these, commonplace as they would undoubtedly have been. A man may be tender toward a woman's rhapsodies about her lover when that lover is himself. But—"funny!"

"O, O, O!" She clutched his arm. "What funny people!" The fatal adjective again. This time he winced, winced twice deliberately, lest she should mistake the first signal of distress as a mere physical infirmity.

She continued, quickly:

"That reminds me—I don't know why it reminds me, but it does—force of habit, perhaps, because he hates badly turned out women so—Don is up in town to-night. Did you know. I wonder if we shall come across him?"

"You mean Lord Kilmore's younger son?"

"You remember Don?"

Her glance, meeting his full, showed some surprise at his obvious ill temper. She put her hand out hurriedly, with a pretty, unaffected gesture of sympathy.

"Dear! You're not ill?"

Nothing irritates a man whose liver is out of order so much as being reminded of the fact. The deepening curves at Chinnock's mouth grew positively rigid with irritation.

"Of course not. Is anything ever the matter with me? How your imagination runs away with you—dearest!" The "dearest" was a dutiful concession to the situation, but, somehow, she shrank from it, her ardor chilled, the keenness of her enjoyment marred already.

"We have still ten minutes to wait before the curtain rises," he said. (He regretted his customary after-dinner coffee.) "What if I took the opportunity of explaining to you the motif of the play? It is a trifle complex."

"It would be kind of you," she said, with a little smile, but, notwithstanding, her eyes showed some disappointment as she scanned the house. She was longing to speak the sweet banalities to which most lovers find it pleasant to listen; to make her bright little comments and butterfly criticisms, to sip to its full the evening's cup of evanescent enjoyment; to be, in a word, herself—the creature of the moment, and his own. She had looked forward to to-night—the first of her emancipation—with rapturous excitement. "It will be almost as good as being his wife," she had confided to the married sister under whose chaperonage she was spending the twenty-four hours in town, which broke her journey between a Gloucestershire visit and her travels further north. "To have him all to myself for a whole evening! To feel that I really belong to him as he belongs to me! Can you imagine anything more perfect?"

Lady Guthrie could, easily, but she did not say so. She had only met Chinnock once, and he impressed her as a prig and a bore, and Margot's angry disclaimers could not alter her sister's opinion.

"You have to marry him, not I!" she said, comfortably. "What does it matter what I think? He's well off, which is something. At least you can congratulate yourself so far. No one can patronize you. Your women friends won't be able to pass you on their unbecoming last year's clothing nor their husbands' stale tobacco."

"You're prejudiced," Margot replied; "all sisters are." Which in a sense was true, for Lady Guthrie's sympathy was openly enlisted on behalf of the scapegrace of the Kilmore family, young Don Garrick, who had adored Margot since she trespassed barefacedly and barefoot in the Kilmore deer forest as a little child. But Margot, having systematically dominated him for eighteen years, already felt the pleasure might pall if long continued. "He has been so much to me all my life; it would be boring for him to become more still during the rest of it. I know him so well—too well," she said, in excuse for her cold-heartedness. But at objections such as these Lady Guthrie shook her head in stern disclaimer.

"Wait," she said, eagerly, "wait." And Margot waited.

To-night for the first time she saw something of the reverse side of her new picture, the canvas-back. Was it disloyal to wish that Mr. Chinnock behaved more as one expects a lover to behave even in public, that he should show some sort of open pride of possession, of glad proprietorship? In the row immediately in front of them there was a gay, absorbed young couple, chatting, laughing, looking, smiling, reading their own tender meanings into the most trivial incidents of the evening. Margot watched them, fascinated in spite of herself. How differently they behaved to herself and her lover! The man leant slightly forward—he "had got it badly," Don would have said—every now and then his coat sleeve touched the little immovable white-gloved hand next his, and lingered for a moment caressingly. Margot's eyes grew tender, abstracted; it was so pretty, so natural! It woke her sympathy and gave her a pleasant little feeling of companionship; almost unconsciously she herself moved a little closer.

"Are you attending? Margot, I don't believe you've heard a word I've said!"

Margot started, her cheeks aflame, and turned to him in generous apology. "Dear, I'm so sorry! How dreadful of me. It's all so fresh, and new, and wonderful to me, you see. I'm a bit scatter-brained; such intelligence, as I have is limited to only taking in one thing at a time. Tell me all about it again. I'll listen, truly. Do forgive me, Richard, please!"

Her pleading broke down even Chinnock's indignation. But his shirt front looked extraordinarily stiff and starched and white, rather like polished marble, she thought, or was it only papier-mache, and Margot moved instinctively a little further from him as he continued:

"Foremost in the ranks of our latter-day satirists, James Lee Hoey stands unequaled. She it was who practically founded the New School. She stands alone. Her disciples imitate laboriously her brilliant dialogue, her scintillating epigram—"

"Her?" the girl repeated vaguely; "her? Why do you speak of him as her? Surely he is a man."

"Do you mean——" he asked. "Is it possible that a living woman exists who does not recognize the supreme fact that this one of our greatest writers—I had almost said our one great writer—honored her sex by belonging to it?"

"I never realized that to belong to either sex was a question of one's own volition," Margot said quietly. "I did not know that 'James Lee Hoey' was a woman, and, what is more, I'm not especially proud of the fact. I don't admire her. She is cynical, and hard, and morbid. I like Rhoda Broughton far, far better—I love her, in fact, she's so human, and—and Mrs. Hungerford, and dear Mrs. Clifford, and Beatrice Harraden, and heaps of others."

She choked a little in her excitement, trying to keep back her tears. It was all so trivial, but she had been petted and made much of all through her happy eighteen years, her criticism asked, her opinion deferred to, and now—— Repulsed, hurt, suffering, she shrank away from him. His kiss on greeting had been cold; his kiss on parting might reasonably be expected to be frigid.

She sat in outward quietude, her head averted, her thoughts tumultuous. If this was the beginning, what, O what would the end be? When the curtain rose at length it was a relief, but the relief passed when it fell again. If an hour of him was so trying, what would a lifetime prove? At the second act he left her to have a cigaret in the foyer. She sat listlessly. What a fool she had been! What a mistake she had made! Was it irrevocable? One's people knew something after all; so much she must admit. She had thought him cultivated, charming. They had met on a northern visit, and he had been out deerstalking all day; at night he was too tired to prose over much, and his priggishness had passed for culture. Since their engagement they had met for the most part at big functions, and there it happened that, until to-night, they had really seen remarkably little of each other.

And what an awakening to-night had brought! She held her program in her hand, looking at it with unseeing eyes. How blurred it was—how stained—how like her future life would be, lived out with him!

A shadow crossed the page. She looked up. A well-remembered presence made itself felt.

"Margot! Crying!"

She sprang to her feet gladly, triumphantly, catching with her two hands at the firm, protecting fingers which gripped hers.

"Oh, Don," she said, brokenly, "take me back. Please take me home before he comes again, dear. I can't stand him any more. Talk nonsense, Don; tell me I'm 'ripping,' and 'a brick,' and 'jolly,' in all the rest of the dear, delightful, slangy terms. And Oh, Don, if you love me, dear, make love to me, real love, for always. Don't ever, ever, be cultured or superior."

"If I love you," he said.

And before the look of his eyes her own fell. But it did not matter, for he took her home.—The Ladies' Field.

Portrait and Slipper.

A touching anecdote, associated with a picture in the National Gallery at Edinburgh, is told by an English lady in her book, "Pot-Pourri from a Surrey Garden." She writes:

Several pictures stand out with peculiar interest, especially the life-sized Gainsborough of the young Mrs. Grahame. She sat for the picture as a bride, but before it came home she was dead, and her husband had gone to the wars.

When he came back he never had the courage to open the case which contained his young wife's portrait. On his death, many long years after it was painted, it was opened by his heirs, and inside the case was the little white slipper she had left with the painter to help him to finish his picture.

The portrait was given to the Edinburgh Gallery, and the slipper was kept by the family.

ANECDOTE AND INCIDENT

Two canny Scots, walking to Auchtermuchty, saw an uncouth figure standing in a distant field. After gazing intently one said: "It's never moving, so it's a tatta (potato) bogle" (scarecrow. "It's no a tatta bogle," replied the other; "it's a man working by the day."

David Hume, the historian, once made an offer of marriage to a lady who refused him, but whose friends shortly afterward conveyed to him the intelligence that she had changed her mind. "So have I," replied David, laconically, "so have I." And he lived and died in single blessedness.

George IV. became convinced, by dint of long imagining and saying so, that he had led the Life Guards at Waterloo. "Did I not, Arthur?" he said, at a court dinner, to the Duke of Wellington. Most men would have been embarrassed. Not so the Iron Duke. He simply answered: "I have often heard your Majesty say so."

Bob Ingersoll was recently talking with an old colored woman in Washington on religious matters. "Do you really believe, aunty," said he, "that people are made of dust?" "Yes, sah; de Bible say dey is, and I believe it." "But what is done in wet weather, when there's nothing but mud?" "Den I s'pects dey make infidels and sich truck."

The distinction between the parish rector and the curate in the old days is illustrated by a story of an old rector. Returning to his parish after his autumn holiday, and noticing a woman at her cottage door with her baby in her arms, he asked: "Has that child been baptized?" "Well, sir," replied the courtesying mother, "I shouldn't like to say as much as that, but your young man came and did what he could."

Two Irish laborers, old time friends, met on the street in San Francisco recently, and after a cordial hand-shake one of them inquired: "An' where have yees be'n, Moike?" "Workin' on the farrums in Southern California," was the reply, "and O'im moighty glad ter git back." "What happened yees thare?" was the next inquiry. "Th' weather. It was too doombed hot. Why, whin Oi was a workin' near Frisno th' t'ermom'ter marked wan hundred an' sixteen dagrais in th' shade." "Is that so? Will, be hivens, they didn't make yees worruk in th' shade, did they?"

Lady Blessington, who was accorded the name of "the gorgeous," when Prince Louis Napoleon, the last emperor of the French, was an exile in London, was remarkably courteous to him, extending her hospitality in the most lavish way. After his accession to the throne of France she was in Paris for a season, and somewhat naturally looked forward to an invitation to the Tuileries. Time passed and none came. But at a sumptuous ball given elsewhere the emperor passed in the full splendor of his triumph. Catching sight of his benefactress, he smiled and asked: "Ah, Lady Blessington! You remain in Paris for a time?" "Yes, sire," said she; "and you?"

When Mark Twain was first introduced to Gen. Grant the later shook hands in a perfuctory manner and immediately relapsed into his customary attitude of reticence, says the Ladies' Home Journal. There was an awkward pause; it grew longer and longer as the humorist tried to think of something bright to say. Finally, as if in sheer desperation, Twain looked up, with an assumed air of great timidity, and said: "Mr. President, I—I feel a little bit embarrassed. Do you?" The President could not help smiling, and Mark took advantage of the chance the incident presented to give place to others. Ten years later, when statesman and humorist met again, Gen. Grant, with a twinkle in his eye, said, before Twain had the chance to utter a word: "Mr. Clemens, I don't feel at all embarrassed. Do you?"

The captain of a vessel which was bringing to America, in the fall of 1796, a mysterious passenger who had come aboard at Hamburg, watched the latter so closely that at last the passenger said one day. "Sir, this is not the first occasion upon which I have observed the attentive scrutiny you bestow upon me. May I inquire the reason?" "Sir," responded the candid captain, "you took passage on my ship as a Dane; I don't believe you're anything of the kind." The passenger smiled; the smile was full of perspicacity and confidence, and was followed with: "Pray tell me, then, what you believe me to be?" At this question Capt. Ewing fidgeted, hesitated, and finally blurted out: "Well, to be honest, I think you are a gambler. You've well-nigh ruined yourself at home, and are now coming to fleece the fools you'll find on shore." The young man's smile broadened; the next minute he turned grave again, lowered his voice, and replied: "Captain Ewing, as you have studied me during this voyage, so I have studied you. I have come to the conclusion that you are a man to be trusted. I am Louis Philippe, Duc d'Orleans, eldest son of that Louis Philippe d'Orleans who was slain by the guillotine on the seventh of November, almost three years ago."

Geese Washing Their Food.

Dr. R. H. Ward remarks a curious habit which he noticed in animals, not famous for intellectual brightness. "When passing the village of West Point, Va., one day, while sailing on the York River, I noticed at the water's edge, on the very muddy shore, a busy crowd of geese eagerly feeding on that delicacy of Southern goose-diet, chunks of thrown-away watermelon rind. But the supply from the garbage dumps along the shore was mostly so covered with mud, sand and adherent filth that even a goose knew too much to eat it, or else couldn't swallow it. So each bird that found a piece too dirty to eat picked it up and deliberately carried it down to the water, sometimes a yard or two distant, to wash it. Without any effort to eat it first, he dropped it into the shallow water, and stood watching it until the running stream had carried away the extraneous matted and left the tempting pulp fresh and clean (according to a goose's sanitary ideas), when he quickly stepped into the shallow water beside it and gobbled off the edible pulp with a good will. Had I heard of this from some 'longshore fisherman, I should have more than suspected some mistake or exaggeration; but I saw and watched it myself, for half an hour or more, and saw the same thing done repeatedly and by several different birds; and, therefore, I know that it was the habit of the flock at that time."

Israel Putnam's Exploit Matched.

A brave deed, in order to be handed down to posterity, must be fortunate in the place, time and circumstances of its occurrence, and also in its historian. An Idaho paper records in a few words an exploit which seems to reveal an intrepidity quite equal to that shown in the reputed entrance of the wolf's cave at Pomfret by Israel Putnam; but the incident appears so ordinary to the Idaho paper that it does not even put on record the name of the young man who was the hero of the adventure.

However, it records the name of Charles Lockerman, who shot the mountain lion after the man had smoked it out of its cage—which seems to be much the less important part of the achievement.

It seems that near Pearl, in Boise County, Idaho, a mountain lion, shown to be of great size by its trail, was tracked to a cave by Charles Lockerman, who had two or three men with him.

Then the question rose, how was the cougar to be got out of the cave?

"One of the men with Lockerman"—so the hero is designated—volunteered to enter the cave, light a fire, creep out, and leave the animal to be smoked out, so that Lockerman could shoot him.

Now a mountain lion of full size is quite as formidable as a wolf, and to enter the cave with him must be as great an achievement as that which is legendary concerning Israel Putnam. But this anonymous person did not hesitate. At the risk of encountering the wild beast, he took some brush and some matches, crept into the cave, made a fire, and crept out again.

Soon the smoke filled the cave; soon also the mountain lion, snarling, came bounding out. Lockerman was ready, and a ball from his rifle laid the creature low. It was measured, and found to be seven feet in length.

Politeness in Mexico.

No other nation can equal Mexico in the stately courtesy practiced in everyday life among all classes. Even the poor laborers rarely address one another without some terms of endearment. "Como estas, mi alma?" ("How are you, my soul?") is a common form of address. Every one seems to have a gentle consideration for the feelings of others. "My lady, I am at your feet," is the prescribed form of salutation from a gentleman who meets a lady, whereas if two gentlemen meet they say, "I kiss your hand."

A Mexican will never permit a lady to descend the stairs alone; he takes her by the hand or offers his arm and only takes leave of her at the street door. Often in their rambles through Mexico strangers lose their way and if they have a slight knowledge of Spanish an appeal to a native is certain to bring courteous relief.

The Mexican lover calls his sweetheart "the very eyes of me" and if she rejects him he is likely to say, "Since there is no help I bow before you, kiss your feet and depart."

Mexican politeness always has the appearance of perfect sincerity. An American young lady was once talking with an old Mexican gentleman and she laughingly said something about having some literary work to do. It was good to see the old fellow's impressive manner as he exclaimed: "Work! Miss, such lips as yours should never mention work. You should be a queen and wear pearls as beautiful as those incased in your lovely mouth!"

Quaint Costumes of Holland.

Many people will have seen the charming portrait which has been taken of Wilhelmina in the national dress of the Friesland women. To realize how wise was the decision of the regent mother to encourage her daughter in her fondness for the handsome peasant dress, one must understand what an important place in the lives and affection of the Dutch people of the present day their national dress holds. In all parts of the country the old styles of peasant dresses are still to be seen. On the brows of the women of Zeeland wonderful headdresses of silver and gold are worn by the Friesland women. There are no more conservative people in the matter of dress and family customs than the Dutch, and their little queen has become doubly dear to them through her devotion to the quaint national dress and her love for many other of the time-honored customs.

British Success in War.

In all the wars of the British they have won the splendid average of 82 per cent. of the battles. This is the world's record.

The Discovery of Florida.

Ponce de Leon, the Spanish navigator, made the discovery of the land which he afterwards named Florida, on Easter Sunday, March 27, 1513.

A Scientific Grandpapa.

"See, grandpapa, my flower!" she cried;
"I found it in the grasses!"
And with a kindly smile, the Sage Surveyed it through his glasses.

"Ah, yes," he said, "involucrate,
And all the florets ligulate,
Corolla gamopetalous—
Compositae—exogenous—
A pretty specimen it is,
Taraxacum dens-leonis!"

She took the blossom back again,
His face her wistful eye on.
"I thought," she said, with quivering lip,
"It was a dandelion!"

Parrot, Cat and Dog in a Cage.

The Chinese must be past masters of the art of household discipline. Here is a typical happy family of Pekin. A

A Children's Party at a Palace.

How time flies, to be sure! It seems hardly more than yesterday since the Queen of Holland was a child—a merry, sunshiny little girl, usually seen in white, a large, broad-brimmed hat with a white ostrich feather half hiding the pretty face, and the long, fair hair rippling down her shoulders. Now she has changed into a tall, slender maiden, full of grace and royal majesty. The new Queen of Holland has been a very popular person ever since she was born; and Dutch children never tire of hearing about the time when Queen Wilhelmina played many a merry game with her thirty dolls, and with the little boys and girls who used to be invited to the palace to amuse her; never tire of hearing of her warm love for animals—horses especially—and her admiration for soldiers and all that concerns them, and her great capacity for learning, and her quickness in seeing a joke.

And if the young Queen has by this time perfectly acquired the art of behaving when necessary in quite as stately a fashion as the dignity of a queen demands, she is a very lively and bright girl, nevertheless; and there is at the Hague a boy who would most emphatically convince you of the truth of this statement, if you were to doubt it. When, several years ago, he was about nine or ten years old, he had the good fortune to be invited to a children's party at the palace. His mother was glad, but somewhat uneasy, too. Such a very independent and noisy lad, her boy was! Surely there was some reason for her being afraid that he would not behave so well as she wished him to. She told him to try to mind his manners, and not to "stamp in that dreadful way," and not to talk too loudly. "And, mind you, don't forget to say Mevrouw (Madame) to the little Queen when you speak to her."

But this was too much for Willem, who had been listening attentively, if a little impatiently, perhaps.

"'Mevrouw!'" he exclaimed indignantly. "I am not going to be such a silly as to call her all that! 'Mevrouw,' indeed! And she is not married, and only twelve years old!"

For quite half an hour his mother took pains to make him understand that etiquette demanded the little Queen should be addressed as "Madame." He obstinately refused to be brought to reason. "It is so absurd!" he said. "How can I call her 'Mevrouw,' when she has no husband?"

The attempt to make him understand had to be given up. He looked a perfect little gentleman, though, when he drove to the palace, accompanied by his little sisters.

Solemn-looking lackeys stood ready to conduct them to one of the beautiful old rooms in the palace, where some other little guests were already assembled, and they were welcomed by ladies of the court. When all the guests had arrived, a lackey, opening a door, announced in a loud voice: "Her Majesty the Queen!" And all eyes were eagerly turned in one direction.

A hush, a patter of quick little feet, then in walked—nay, ran—Queen Wilhelmina, simply dressed in a frock of soft, cream-colored silk. Willem gave a quick little nod of content. He liked that.

She did not behave or look like a "mevrouw" in the least; and he clapped his hands when she said gaily: "Let us have a good, noisy game; blindman's buff, or—or anything you boys know!" And "noisy" games they had, several of them—blindman's buff among the rest; and Willem thoroughly enjoyed himself, and twice caught the Queen when his eyes were bandaged. "I knew at once it was she," he said afterward, "as soon as I touched her sleeve. It felt so soft and nice, quite different from the others. But, of course, I never called her 'Mevrouw.' I just said 'Koningin' (Queen), and I am sure she liked it."

Well, what Queen Wilhelmina certainly did like was to play and to romp and to be merry as well as other children. Perhaps no Dutch girl surpasses her in her love of skating and riding.—St. Nicholas.

Out of the Mouths of Babes.

"Mamma," said a certain little man, "when you go to town buy me a whistle and let it be a religious whistle, so that I can play with it on Sunday!"

Visitor—Well, Johnnie, I suppose your father thinks the twins are something wonderful. Johnnie—Yes, but (in a confidential whisper) I could lick 'em both easy.

A little boy whose new-born sister set up a tremendous cry on getting her bath, exclaimed: "Well, I don't wonder they sent you down here if you made such a noise as that in heaven!"

"Well, Johnnie," said the minister to a little fellow, aged 6, "I hear you are going to school now." "Yes, sir," was the reply. "And what part of it do you like best?" asked the good man. "Comin' home," was the prompt and truthful answer.

Harry, aged 5, had his photograph taken recently, and when the proof was sent home his mamma said he looked too solemn and asked him why he didn't smile. "I did smile, mamma," replied the little fellow, "but I guess the man forgot to put it down."

"I just think our mamma is an awful gossip," said 6-year-old Walter to his little sister. "Oh, how can you say such a thing?" she exclaimed. "Well, that's just what she is," replied the little fellow. "Everything I do she runs and tells papa. A gossiping woman makes me tired."

"Mamma," asked little Willie, "did Daniel Webster build the dictionary?" "No, dear; it was Noah; but why do you ask?" said his mother. "Why," replied the youngster, "our teacher said that Noah built the ark, and I thought he might have got Daniel to build the dictionary for him if he was busy."

Tommy, aged 5, and his cousin Willie, aged 6, had several little altercations, in which Tommy invariably got the worst of it. One day his mamma said to him: "Tommy, to-morrow is Willie's birthday; wouldn't you like to give him something?" "You just better believe I would," was the reply; "but, you see, he's bigger than I am and I can't."

Little 5-year-old Clara's papa had been away on a protracted business trip, and her mamma was putting things in order and making sundry preparations for his return. Clara watched her closely for a while, and then observed: "Mamma, you make as much fuss as old Mr. Prodigal." "What do you mean, dear?" asked her mother. "I never heard of Mr. Prodigal." "Oh, yes, you did, mamma," was the reply. "Don't you know, the Bible tells about what a fuss he made when his son came back?"

DESERVED THE DECORATIONS.

An Enterprising Burglar Who Burgled to Some Purpose.

To the social ambition of burglars there is no limit. They bicycle to a suburban crib which they have arranged to crack, drive dogcarts and wear gold-rimmed spectacles. Another phase of their desire for higher recognition among the community is greatly exercising the mind of a respected resident of Putney, who returned after a brief holiday at the beginning of the week to find that in his absence his house had been visited by at least one thief, who appropriated a quantity of plate, a dress suit, two Greek decorations for merit of which the housekeeper was the proud possessor, and a ticket for a public dinner to an official of a golf club who is leaving England for Australia.

This function was fixed for Tuesday evening. The excitement of the burglary drove all recollection of the banquet from his head, and it was only when some friends mentioned how charming his representative was at the banquet that he remembered the disappearance of the ticket, which was marked, "One guinea; wine included." Subsequent investigation showed that the burglar had not only appropriated the admission card, but actually wore the gentleman's Greek decorations at the dinner, where he represented himself to be the ticket holder's cousin, who was on his holidays, and made himself so popular among the company with stories of his exploits in the late Greek war that several of them invited him to visit their houses.

And now the real owner of the decorations is trying to find out all these gentlemen and warn them of the danger they run should the false guest honor them with his presence, because it would merely be the preliminary of another burglary. He is not quite sure whether he has succeeded in tracing all who were attracted by the housebreaker's bonhomie.—London Telegraph.

It Astonished Her.

Clara—I wonder who that strange gentleman is with Mrs. Wederly. They seem to be very much interested in each other.

Maude—That is her husband.

Clara—Impossible! Why, I thought they were married six months ago.

BEAUTIFUL AND ACCOMPLISHED

Lady Helen Vincent, the Brilliant Wife of an English Diplomat.

Whenever his diplomatic duties permit a visit to London, Sir Edgar Vincent is always accompanied by his lovely wife, who during her stay in the British capital is always voted one of the reigning beauties. In former years she and her three sisters were conceded to be the four most beautiful sisters in the United Kingdom. Their father was the Earl of Faversham. All four were as lovely of character as they were fair of face. The eldest, Lady Hermione Duncombe, who married the Duke of Lewiston, died a few years ago. The second, Lady Cynthia, is the wife of Sir Richard Graham. Lady Vincent is the third and Lady Ulrica is the youngest. The last named is yet single. She devotes herself largely to her studies at Girton College. Lady Vincent is the only blonde of the family. When just out of school nine years ago she married Sir Edgar, who has nearly ever since been stationed at Constantinople or Vienna. In each of these places Lady Vincent filled a leading position in society, not only because of her wealth, beauty and high social standing, but because of her wit and culture. She speaks and writes five languages besides her own, one of them being Turkish, that terror to linguists. Next to pride in her husband's successful career perhaps Lady Vincent takes most satisfaction in remembering that she is a descendant of Richard Brinsley Sheridan, the brilliant Irish wit and playwright. The Vincents have one of the finest country places in England, Esher place.

LADY HELEN VINCENT.

HOME, SWEET HOME.

The "Lowly Thatched Cottage" that Inspired Payne's Song.

The "lowly thatched cottage" which furnished the inspiration for John Howard Payne's immortal melody, "Home, Sweet Home," still stands at East Hampton, L. I. It is somewhat changed since the days of the poet-diplomat, but, surrounded by roses and other garden flowers and covered with clinging vines, it is still one of those beautiful homely spots which arouse the poetic fancy. It stands in a picturesque spot overlooking the village churchyard and is visited by all strangers in town. It was here that Payne spent his boyhood.

Bribing Spurgeon.

The recent autobiography of the late Rev. Charles H. Spurgeon contains an account of what may be termed an early business venture, and its influence on his character. Spurgeon was brought up on Watts' hymns; but not altogether willingly. His grandmother coaxed him with money to learn them. At first she gave him a penny, but when she saw how easily it was earned, the old lady reduced the prize to a halfpenny and then to a farthing. There is no telling how low the amount per hymn might have fallen, but just at this time his grandfather made a discovery which seemed more desirable to Spurgeon. He discovered that his house was overrun with rats, and offered his grandson a shilling a dozen for all he could kill. The occupation of rat-killing gave him more money than learning hymns. "But," Mr. Spurgeon characteristically says, "I know which employment has been the more permanently profitable to me."

A Paradise for Women.

In the matter of woman's rights Abyssinia is far ahead of Europe. According to an authority, the house and all its contents belong to her, and if the husband offends her she not only can, but does, turn him out of doors till he is duly repentant and makes amends by the gift of a cow or the half of a camel—that is to say, half the value of a camel. On the other hand, it is the privilege and duty of the wife to abuse her husband, and she can divorce herself from him at pleasure, whereas the husband must show reasons to justify such an act on his part.

Resisted Bravely.

Magistrate (sternly)—You're a pitiable specimen of humanity. What brought you to all this degradation and disgrace?

Prisoner (proudly)—It took three policemen.

Every new doctor believes he can cure consumption and cancer.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.,

FRIDAY, JANUARY 6.....1899

Stewart's bill granting 20,000,000 acres of arid land to Nevada for irrigation has been amended so as to grant 5,000,000 acres to each of the arid land States. California probably included. Land given to States is generally turned over by hook or by crook to private speculators. There are few instances where any other result has followed, and on that account the State land-grant proposition is very popular among legislators and lobbyists who believe that the public owes them a living. We do not for a moment believe that the proposed Stewart grant would add an acre to the area of irrigated farm land or that it would be valuable to anybody outside of the usual ring. What financial resources has Nevada, for example, to irrigate 5,000,000 acres? What likelihood is there that she would raise money for such a purpose? And as for California with an empire of good land on her hands unoccupied, she would no more go into desert reclamation than she would into the business of adding to the ocean shore line. A hundred years hence she might do so, but not now. The game would not be worth the candle. This work is one to be taken up, if at all, by the General Government. Let Congress irrigate the 20,000,000 acres and submit them to pre-emption under the land laws. If the object is to settle up the deserts with industrious and thrifty farmers, that is the only way to proceed. States will not do it at their own expense or while they have a surplus of good land on the market. They could not afford to on the basis of their present revenues even if the land were needed; but they would not object to having the Federal Government try its hand.

The President announces that the "open door" provision does not mean that there is to be any sort of free trade with the Philippines, but only that goods from ports over there must stand the Dingley tariff and he adds that the United States must pay her share of the government of those islands. That is to say that the poor people of this country must stand it. It must still come from backs and stomachs! Oh, if all the millions Congress and the Administration are continually fooling with only came out of the wealth of the country, what a shaking up there would be among the ery bones! But this is a country of great resources and the backs and stomachs can stand just a little more in order that money may have other opportunities. The boys write from the Philippines that there is opportunity there for money but none for a poor man. But the poor man in this country must keep up that opportunity for money!

A dispatch to the Herald from Manila says: Admiral Dewey considers it absolutely necessary that a first-class statesman be sent to Manila to thoroughly investigate the situation here and ascertain the aspirations of the Filipinos Republicans. He further states that the United States must accept the responsibilities in the Philippines which have been acquired by conquest. If they should shirk this duty they would put themselves back two hundred years in the world's history. The first Republican government has resigned over the question of American intervention in the government of the Philippine Islands. Owners of property desire American cooperation. The present temporary Cabinet which will exercise power pending the election is very anti-American. It allows of no American co-operation whatever and wants to declare a free republic and to consider Americans as allies. It is willing to grant liberal commercial treaties, with a monopoly of the mines and railways and to repay the expenses of the American occupation of Manila. Troubles due to mal-contents continue in the province of Tarlac and Pangasinian. Republican troops have been sent there to quell disturbances.

It doesn't pay to be courageous and venturesome in the army. The reward for skulking and cowardice is far more remunerative and sure. Witness the two highest military honors in the gift of the Government—the Secretary of War and Adjutant General of the United States army bestowed upon two convicted cowards: Gen. R. A. Alger, mustered out of service by orders of Generals Merritt, Custer and Sheridan, for cowardice before Chancellorsville. Witness General Corbin, court-martialed for cowardice in front of Nashville, Dec. 14, 1864. He skulked and got behind a tree in the rear, while his regiment went to to the charge—a colored regiment.

In a public address delivered something over two years ago Benjamin Harrison said that the Republican party was not afraid to meet the issue involved in the growth of trusts; that the party would provide legislation to protect the consumer and the laborer from the effects of monopoly. We have had a Republican administration for nearly two years, and there were never so many trusts in this country as there are now; trusts never before had so powerful an influence, were never before so extortionate and arbitrary.

The dispatches fail to state whether General Lee carried out his prediction, made to General Blanco a year ago, that he would return to Havana marching behind a brass band and under the American flag

Hot work seems to be laid out for the American troops in the Philippines, but they will be found just as able and just as willing to meet every emergency as were the boys who carried the flag to victory in Cuba.

SUGGESTIVE SKETCHES AND HINTS FOR HOME DECORATORS.

The General Idea In Toilet Tables—Lace Fluted Ruffles and Ribbons Form the Usual Trimming—Striped Cretonne and Dotted Swiss Find Great Favor.

Away from the big art and decorative centers, and hungry for tasteful surroundings, are many women who with an inborn facility for creating the things they desire need only a suggestion and a start in the right direction. For such home women who rejoice in homemade articles the dressing table is a strong point toward the accomplishment of satisfactory interior decoration. It can be made a charming object and the center of the scheme for a whole room. Nearly every one has an idea of the mode of making and covering the ordinary wooden dressing table. In this article are simply reproduced some suggestive illustrations and hints as to drapery and ornamentation originally presented by The Decorator and Furnisher:

In all toilet tables the general idea should be one where a delicacy of tints is happily combined. Pale blue silk with point esprit is always available. In fact, all these decorations are a rule to themselves. If for a pink room, then the thin drapery should cover well the tone of pink, especially if it be one of decided hue. By the adding of certain filmy materials, such as lace or fluted ruffles of some four or five inches wide, the scheme is sure to be one which as an artistic plan is well secured, and to set off the whole nothing is prettier than a pretty ribbon either in satin or figured, which, when tied into bows and loops, forms for this drapery a side decoration.

For the dainty bedroom the striped cretonne is often employed, particularly those in which stripes, narrow and wide, complement a running vine or pretty floral decoration. In all draperies of this sort the white background is preferable, making for the pattern a cleanliness of appearance that is especially refreshing to the eye and a charm as a color scheme. To make this unusually attractive the ruffles can be closely plaited or gathered into an easy and flowing style—the lower edge trimmed in a narrow ribbon or inexpensive lace, the curtains well looped back with a ribbon in solid or flower effects to match the goods which furnish the plan.

But to the young girl who perhaps has hankerings for womanly belongings then the dotted swiss should claim her attention—a stylish affair in big dots, fine in quality and of a slight tone of cream, just a little off the white. For this the hue considered as the dressing slip should be a delicate yellow or tender green, one of those lemon colored tints or a tone of apple green, as desired.

Nowadays the newer silk furnishes beautifully, but is expensive, so that to make it of a price that is available for all the fine sateen in any of these two shades can be obtained and do handsome duty as the decorative foundation. Dotted swiss can be employed in as small a dot as a pin head if desired, or in a circle as large as a 10 cent piece. Either will do, but all are equally ornamental.

One View of a Moot Point.

It may be said that the little word "My" placed before the word "dear" has a significance of its own. When used between ladies thus, "My dear Mrs. A.," it is to devote an extra amount of cordiality and friendliness, and again when a gentleman so writes to a lady of his acquaintance it has the same reading. On the other hand, "My dear Mr. B." is seldom or never written by ladies to their men acquaintances, "Dear Mr. B." being considered sufficiently affectionate. Elderly ladies, however, are outside of this rule, and write "My dear Mr. B." to men whom they have known as boys.

THE MIRROR OF FASHION.

White lawns with forgetmenots and small figures will be among the pretty summer dress patterns.

All the light tints will be in vogue this season and will be elaborately trimmed with lace and embroidery.

Scotch plaids will be popular in ginghams, and for trimming gowns made of such material braid silk and velvet will be used.

The most approved style in tailor made suits is the beaded seam, which has taken the place of the old lap or strap. This marks a decided change in the tailor made costume.

A pretty cloth jacket is of tan face cloth, appliqued in white and gold. On the waist are flounce shaped designs from the band to the yoke of white and gold. Many jet beads form the yoke.

The hosiery this coming season will be as varied in style and color as the gowns or headgear. Scotch and shepherd's plaids as well as striped and embroidered designs will be fashionable.

Women are now wearing the short corsets in place of the long ones which have for years been considered correct. These small and dainty affairs are worn in all the delicate shades in addition to royal purple.

Mme. Fashion has some beautiful flower hats this season, and among her favorites is one of forgetmenots, trimmed at the side with turquoise blue velvet loops and ends, and a large buckle of turquoise and pearls.

A hat suitable for large women this year is of braided straw, the crown being encircled by three flounces of turquoise taffeta ribbon, a tight band running around the crown. A spiral of ribbon and bunch of morning glories form the side trimming.

A curious and pretty effect is obtained by the introduction of faconne scrolls into tartan silks. The latest novelty in gossamer is the scroll printed in a lighter color in mousseline de soie. These are being made over silk, the color of the scroll showing the ground conspicuously.—New York Tribune.

FOREIGN STAGE GLINTS.

M. Paul Legrand, once so celebrated as Pierrot, has died at the age of 82.

Henry Arthur Jones' new comedy, it is said, in its general character will be akin to "The Liars."

The emperor of Austria has conferred the title of royal imperial chamber singer on Mme. Lilli Lehmann.

An adaptation by M. Pierre Berton of Mr. Pinero's comedy, "The Magistrate," has been produced in Paris at the Theater de Cluny.

"My Innocent Boy" is the name of a new comedy, written by George R. Sims and Leonard Merrick, which is likely to be seen soon in London at the Royalty theater.

Henri Marteau is expected this week in Paris. He expects to play in Russia, Hungary and Austria during the coming season and to return to the United States next spring.

Massenet, the French composer, has been in Milan to supervise the last rehearsals there of his "Sappho," leaving the last rehearsals of his "Thais" at the Grand Opera in Paris.

Rev. Leighton Leigh, the English curate who has abandoned his pulpit to go on the stage, says he did so because it was impossible to maintain himself and family on $12 a week.

Wilson Barrett, the famous actor, has been touring Australia and has met with great success, though he has frequently had to play when the thermometer registered 100 in the shade.

Apropos of "The Conquerors" William Archer writes, "Mr. Potter is a playwright of small talent and no taste." What the play lacks, he goes on to say, beyond everything else is intelligence.

Fatal Frivolity.

Jack and his two pretty cousins happened to be walking along in front of a drug store.

"I wonder," said Ethel, "if, astronomically speaking, Uncle Henry's sen is in the right sign for ice cream soda!"

"I'm afraid not," replied Gwendolen, with her eye on the youth. "I don't see any signs of the soda act."

Jack groaned and marched them fiercely past the drug store by way of punishment.—Chicago Tribune.

ACTION brought in the Superior Court of the County of Inyo, State of California, and the Complaint filed in the office of the Clerk of said County of Inyo.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Frank C. Young, Frank M. Kelsey, as Administrator of the Estate of J. F. Ginser, deceased, J. S. Stotler, I. J. Woodin, as Administrator of the Estate of R. M. Todd, deceased, H. M. Todd, Salene Todd, W. B. Ralphs, and Savings Bank of Southern California (a Corporation), Defendants:

You are hereby directed to appear and answer the Complaint in an action entitled as above, brought against you in the Superior Court of the County of Inyo, State of California, within ten days after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this county; or within thirty days if served elsewhere.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court forever quieting the plaintiff in his title and possession of those certain mines, mill sites and water right described in the complaint, on file herein, to which reference is here made, against all claims thereto by the defendants, or either of them, and for costs of suit.

And you are hereby notified that unless you appear and answer as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the County of Inyo, State of California, this second day of August, A. D. 1898.

SUMMONS.

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE COUNTY OF INYO, STATE OF CALIFORNIA.

The People of the State of California, Plaintiff, vs. Lorenzo D. Matthews, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior court of the county of Inyo, State of California, and the complaint filed in the said county of Inyo, in the office of the clerk of said Superior court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to Lorenzo D. Matthews, Defendant:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiffs in the Superior court of the county of Inyo, State of California, and to answer the complaint filed therein within ten days, exclusive of the day of service after the service on you of this summons, if served within this county, or if served elsewhere, within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain judgment foreclosing all your right, title and interest in and to all the following described state school lands of the State of California, situate, lying and being in the county of Inyo, State of California, to wit: The E 1-2 and SW 1-4 Section 36 Township 22 south, Range 37 east; No. 14 of Section 36, Township No. 18 south, Range No. 35 east, M. D. M. And cancelling, annulling, and henceforth rendering null and void the certificate of purchase thereto, No. 12854, from the State of California, for non payment of interest amounting to $134.40, due and unpaid to the said State of California on the first day of January 1896, upon said state school lands and the certificate of purchase thereof aforesaid, then and now unpaid and delinquent, for two dollars cost of publication ten dollars attorney fee and for costs of suit; and for such other and further relief in the premises as the case may require, and as to the court may seem just and equitable, as will more fully appear by reference to the complaint on file herein.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint as above required, said plaintiff will apply to the court for the relief demanded in the complaint.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Superior court of the said county of Inyo, State of California, this 31st day of December, A. D. 1896.

Methodist Church.

Services for Sunday, January 8th, 1899:

Independence—Sunday-school at 2 in the afternoon. Evening preaching service at 7 o'clock.

All are most cordially invited to attend these meetings.

JOHN J. PARDEE, Pastor.

Miss M. F. Doss is visiting friends in town.

Miss Susie Roughney expects to go to Big Pine to-morrow.

Jim Holland came up from Keeler Wednesday, returning next day.

P. W. Forbes Esq., has located his law office in the rooms beneath the Masonic Hall.

M. M Clarke of Bishop is visiting at Independence. He expects to return to-morrow.

B. H. Edwards and wife of Lone Pine spent a couple of days in the early part of the week.

Lem Myers came down from Big Pine on Wednesday's train and will return home to-morrow.

Sailor Jack has been engaged as County Vaquero and is engaged in keeping the cows out of the Court House yard.

District Attorney Dehy has assumed control of his office and has been in attendance on the Board of Supervisors during the week.

Assessor Yandell, accompanied by his family, have been visiting in town for the past two weeks. Mr. Yandell expects to locate here in the near future.

Dave Holland has returned home from a trip to Beveridge in company with a party of Los Angeles mining men. There is a good probability of a sale being effected.

The Board of Supervisors to-day passed a resolution against pensioning any more indigent persons, except in cases of emergency. The present list will not be changed for the present.

An executive meeting of the Athletic Club was held at the hall last evening. It was unanimously decided to give an Athletic entertainment on the 22nd of February. A regular meeting of the Club will be held on Wednesday evening next, when committees will be appointed to take charge of the affair and a programme will be decided upon. The financial condition of the Club is good, the boys are taking an active interest in it and the institution bids fair to be a permanency.

The New Years ball given by the Athletic Club last Monday evening was a pronounced success both in point of attendance and the good time enjoyed. The grand march was called at 9 o'clock and with an intermission for supper at midnight, the mirth continued until 4 o'clock in the morning. There were a good many visitors from the country, and the members of the Club exerted themselves to see that all had a good time. The success of the affair assures a good attendance in the future at any function given by the Club.

Cut His Throat

A man named Edward McManus, who has been employed at the Lane mine for some time past, went to Molock about a week ago and while there became violently insane. J. J. Gunn and Arthur Smith brought him to Darwin and left him in charge of Thos. Leatherdale. Some time during the night he managed to secure a piece of tin and cut his throat in a frightful manner but did not sever a main vein or artery. He was brought to Keeler Wednesday and Dr. Woodin was telegraphed for. The doctor went to Keeler Wednesday and brought the injured man to Independence yesterday. He is seriously wounded and the doctor says an attack of pneumonia is imminent. He is being well cared for and may recover.

THURSDAY, Jan.. 5, 1899,
9 o'clock a. m.

Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo, State of California, met at above stated time, pursuant to adjournment.

Present, Supervisors N. J. Cooley, James Jones, J. J. Stewart, T. H. Henebry and A. C. Freeman, Chairman, presiding.

Minutes of proceedings of preceding meeting read and approved.

Thereupon it was ordered that Supervisers N. J. Cooley James Jones and T. H. Henebry be appointed as a committee of three to investigate and report upon the affairs and condition of the County Hospital.

Whereupon the Board adjourned to meet at 1 o'block p. m., at which hour reconvened, all members present as before.

The committee appointed to investigate and report upon affairs and condition of the County Hospital, report as follows:

We, your committee, appointed to inspect the condition of the County Hospital and the patients residing there, make the following report.

We find 14 patients there at the present time, 11 male and 3 female. Upon inspection we find that the rooms for sleeping are comfortably warm, and the beds sufficient in number, and bedding adequate for the comfort of the patients. The day rooms are warm and comfortable, and separate apartments provided for the male and female patients. The dining room and kitchen seem to be presided over by a competent cook, and the supplies of different kinds ample.

We interviewed the patients and find a general feeling of satisfaction prevailing among them, and all speak in the highest terms of their treatment by Mr. and Mrs. Walters. They report that the food is ample and of good quality.

Respectfully Yours,
T. H. HENEBRY.

Lancing a Felon.

Dr. Stivers of New York had a large dispensary clinic, and rarely a day passed that one or more cases of felon did not appear. "It won't hurt," was always his comforting assurance to the patient if the latter made any outcry. "Put your finger down there," indicating the edge of the table, "and keep still!" he commanded, and patients, as a rule, made little fuss. Dr. Stivers once had a felon on his left forefinger. He poulticed it for about a week, and walked the floor with pain at night. At last he went to his assistant surgeon, who said gravely, "That ought to have been lanced before."

"Possibly—but"— said Dr. Stivers, and then, with a long breath—"perhaps you'd better lance it now."

"Certainly," said the assistant surgeon. "Put your finger on the table."

Dr. Stivers complied, and with a face as white as paper watched the knife. "Be gentle," he cautioned. "That's an awful sore finger!"

"It won't hurt," remarked the assistant surgeon, and the sharp steel descended. There was a howl of agony from Dr. Stivers, and with his finger in his other hand he danced about the room crying, "Oh, oh, oh!"

"Why," remarked the assistant surgeon, "I have heard you tell patients hundreds of times that it didn't hurt to lance a felon."

"No doubt, no doubt you have,' groaned Dr. Stivers, "but that depends on which end of the knife a man is at.'—Exchange.

Willing to Oblige.

Smoking a cigarette the other night in the north I heard a story which, so far as I know, is new. A proud old lady swept indignantly up to the door of a railway carriage at York station. A schoolboy was leaning half way out of the compartment, reflectively making a cigarette, and, after the fashion of the English schoolboy, not caring for anybody. "Is this a smoking compartment?' asked the dame, with scathing voice. "No, madam," replied the boy politely, raising his cap. "If you want a smoking compartment, you will find one a little lower down."

Theaters in Spain.

Theaters in Spain have no programmes. A bill in the lobby sometimes gives the cast, but most of the actors remain unknown by name. The curtain is devoted to advertisements, and in Madrid theaters advertising cards are affixed with the numbers on the back of each seat.

Two literary memorials of considerable interest have come to light lately. One of them is a tortoise-shell case, with ivory tablets, which belonged to Milton; the other is Shelley's guitar, which has come into possession of the Bodleian library. The Milton memento was given to one Richard Lovekin of Nantwich by his aunt, Betty Minshall, who was the poet's third wife, and died in 1727. The Shelley guitar narrowly escaped being taken to Massachusetts, but its owner, Mr. Edward Silsbee, has handed it over to the university which expelled Shelley.

Old Knights Not So Big.

Recently at the tower of London a visitor who was admiring the old suits of armor remarked to an attendant that the Englishmen of the middle ages must have been a robust lot.

"Oh, no, sir," said the guide, with the cheery and rising emphasis on the "sir." "The armor looks large, sir, but you'll find that the waist measure on nearly all these suits is only twenty-eight or thirty inches, sir. That's a very small man, sir. My word for it, there isn't a suit in the room that would be large enough for one of the queen's guardsmen."—Chicago Record.

Originator of Spectacles.

M. Spoon, in his Recherches Curieuses d'Antique, fixes the date of spectacles between the years 1280 and 1311, and says that Alexandre de Spina, having seen a pair made by some other person, discovered the secret, and made it public. Italian antiquarians say that the person was Salvino, who died in 1318, and quotes from an ancient manuscript his epitaph, which says: "Here lies Salvino Arnota de Armiti, of Florence, the inventor of spectacles. May God pardon his sins."

"Let me see some of your black kid gloves," said a lady to a draper's assistant. "These are not the latest style, are they?' she asked, when the gloves were produced. "Yes, madam" replied the man; "we have had them in stock only two days." "I didn't think they were; the fashion papers say black kids have tan stitches, and vice versa. I see the tan stitches, but not the vice versa." The assistant explained that the vice versa was French for seven buttons, so she bought three pairs.—Tit-Bits.

"I think we really ought to give our attention to making things that will be of value to the boys at the front," said the one in pink. The one in blue laughed scornfully. "Has that just occurred to you" she asked. "I began on something for Charlie the very day he left with the troops." "Oh, do tell me what it was," exclaimed the one in pink. "An embroidered sofa-pillow," answered the one in blue, proudly. PERIODS OF PAIN.

Menstruation, the balance wheel of woman's life, is also the bane of existence to many because it means a time of great suffering.

While no woman is entirely free from periodical pain, it does not seem to have been nature's plan that women otherwise healthy should suffer so severely. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the most thorough female regulator known to medical science. It relieves the condition that produces so much discomfort and robs menstruation of its terrors. Here is proof:

DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—How can I thank you enough for what you have done for me? When I wrote to you I was suffering untold pain at time of menstruation; was nervous, had headache all the time, no appetite, that tired feeling, and did not care for anything. I have taken three bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, one of Blood Purifier, two boxes of Liver Pills, and to-day I am a well person. I would like to have those who suffer know that I am one of the many who have been cured of female complaints by your wonderful medicine and advice.—MISS JENNIE R. MILES, Leon, Wis.

If you are suffering in this way, write as Miss Miles did to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., for the advice which she offers free of charge to all women.

It Looked Bad.

A certain young lady against whom appearances certainly looked dark once had an amusing experience of unjust judgment. She went out on a stormy day and was unfortunate enough to have her umbrella turned inside out. Her two sisters were equally unlucky, and on the following day the young lady volunteered to take the three umbellas to be repaired.

Promising to call for them before she returned home in the afternoon, she went about her business, part of which was to do some shopping in a large city establishment. On rising to leave the shop she mechanically put out her hand to take possession of an umbrella that was close by. It looked like her own, and for the moment she had forgotten the accident. She was soon brought to her senses.

"That is my umbrella," said a sharp voice at her side, and a hand was laid on her arm to detain her.

Apologizing for her thoughtlessness, she left the shop, did the rest of her business and called for her umbrellas. In the street car she met an indignant pair of eyes. Where had she seen them before? They scanned first her face and then the burden she carried. "Three of them!" muttered the owner of the eyes, and it was evident that she referred to the umbrellas. "Three! She's din no bad the day."

As she spoke she grasped her own umbrella tightly and moved farther away from the dangerous young lady. The color came into the cheeks of the latter. The speaker was her friend of the morning, and she evidently believed that the umbrellas had been stolen.—Youth's Companion.

Overruled In Rhyme.

In a Georgia court not long since a case involving a jackass came on for trial. The attorneys after indulging in a fine frenzy entered the following inspired motion on the docket:

'If the court will consent, we will take up a case;
It treats not of section, country or race;
It is of no interest to any, be it ladies or lass—
It begins and it ends with a humble jackass.'

Thereupon the judge, hastily summoning his muse to his assistance, entered up the following order:

'This case coming on this day to be heard (Considered by the court to be quite absurd),
And the motion herein the court doth decide
To be hereby overruled and denied,
And the movers thereof shall not be exempt
From a fine of one dollar each for contempt,
Wherein, until paid, the court further passes,
As sentence, that they be deemed said jack asses.'

"De trouble 'bout advice," said Uncle Eben, "is dat de man who has made a sho nuff success in life is gin'rally too busy ter stop an give lessons."—Washington Star.

SERMONS OF THE WEEK

The Essential Force.—Belief is the essential force of all religions—Rev. W. D. Williams, Episcopalian, New York City.

Leadership.—The essential factor of human development is the leadership of great men.—Rev. L. E. Learned, Episcopalian, New York City.

Treasures.—Treasures laid up in heaven while here on earth should win our hearts to heaven.—Rev. Mr. Taylor, Presbyterian, San Bernardino, Cal.

Personality.—Personality is the persuasive element to which all else is subservient and secondary.—Rev. S. P. Cadman, Congregationalist, New York City.

Religion.—If the invitation of religion to-day excludes aught that is lovable and loving the invitation will be rejected in the name of religion.—Rev. J. L. Jones, Unitarian, Chicago, Ill.

Evolution.—All we eat, all we drink and all we wear has been evolved from the life of primitive man to its present perfected state to-day.—Dr. Astor, Spiritualist, San Bernardino, Cal.

Right or Wrong.—There can be no compromise for the Christian. An act is either right or wrong. It is either Christian or un-Christian.—Rev. J. B. Nies, Episcopalian, New York City.

God's Gifts.—The goodness of God ought also to prevent the taking of his name in vain. It is a commonplace that all good things come to us from God.—Rev. A. E. Myers, Colleglate, New York.

The American Conscience.—The American people had consciences, which forced us to stand against oppression, despotism and starvation.—Rev. Lyman Abbott, Congregationalist, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Gospel's Effect.—The Gospel in its effect upon men is reconstructive. And this process of reconstruction is the gift of vitalizing energy.—Rev. Mr. Rollins, Congregationalist, San Bernardino, Cal.

Honesty.—Men differ about many things, but they are united in their estimate of honesty. They believe that strict honesty ought to be the basis of business.—Rev. A. C. Dixon, Baptist, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Acceptation.—Man is saved, not by what he renounces, but what he accepts. Accept truth—there shall be no error. Accept light, and there is no darkness.—Rev. Dr. Bristol, Methodist, Washington, D. C.

Walking with God.—"Walking with God" suggests an association with him in the daily round of life, forming and pursuing one's motives and ideals in his sight.—Rev. Lester Bradner Jr., Episcopalian, New York City.

Laws of Man.—The laws of man and God are strengthened by that dramatic art called uniting with the church and swearing fidelity to conscience and the highest Christian law.—Rev. N. D. Hillis, Independent, Chicago, Ill.

An Infinite Force.—In the selfishness and self-seeking of this present age I see an infinite force diverted to wrong ends, perverted to the making of money and position.—Rev. F. C. Harding, Congregationalist, New York City.

The Rock of Ages.—Every object in nature speaks of Christ, his character, life and work. He is the Rock of Ages, the foundation of our hope, the corner stone of the church.—Dr. McElveen, Congregationalist, Brooklyn, N. Y.

A Powerful Book.—There is a book which has a power possessed by no other book, to make men wise, for the life which now is and the life which is to come. That book is the Bible.—Rev. R. A. Torrey, Presbyterian, Chicago.

Preaching.—The ineffectiveness of preaching is not altogether the fault of ministers. You complain of sermons dry and service dull. Did you ever think that there could be such a thing as a dry hearer?—Rev. J. C. Adams, Universalist, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Brave Jester.

Lord Malmesbury used to relate a good story told him by one of Napoleon's officers—an incident of the Peninsular campaign.

The French officer was reconnoitering with three or four troopers when they came suddenly upon a young English officer similarly occupied, mounted on a superb thoroughbred horse. Summoned by the French colonel to surrender, he quietly cantered away with a mocking smile on his face.

The Frenchman, who rode a heavy horse, pursued at full gallop. The Englishman allowed him to get quite close. Then kissing his hand, and leaving him behind, he shouted, pointing to his horse, "A Norman horse, sir."

Again the Frenchman pursued, threatening to shoot his enemy if he did not surrender. He went so far as to point a pistol at him, but the weapon missed fire.

With a roar of laughter, the young Englishman shouted again, "Made at Versailles, sir," and giving the thoroughbred his head, was soon out of sight.

It was most amusing to hear the old colonel tell this story and describe his rage, adding, however, that he had always felt glad that he had not shot "the brave joker."—Youth's Companion.

A Temperance Thirst Quencher.

Rev. George Charles, the clerical secretary of the Church of England Temperance Society in the Diocese of Canterbury, states that the best "sustainer and thirst quencher" he knows of is made of this formula: "Four ounces of white oatmeal flour, six ounces of lump sugar, and the juice of one lemon. Pour one gallon of boiling water upon it in a large jar. Drink when cool. It is best made overnight for the next day."

A great event in every woman's life is when she goes on a visit and "leaves" her baby for the first time.

For every mistake of your own that you notice, you make a dozen that you are never aware of.

If a girl has them, she puts on her furs the next day after she discards shirt waists.

AN AFFAIR OF THE NATION

It has been said of Americans that they are "a nation of dyspeptics" and it is true that few are entirely free from disorders of the digestive tract, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Stomach and Bowel trouble, or Constipation.

The treatment of these diseases with cathartic medicines too often aggravates the trouble.

THE LOGICAL TREATMENT

is the use of a remedy that will build up the system, thereby enabling the various organs to act as Nature intended they should. Such a remedy is found in Dr Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. Here is the proof.

In Detroit there are few soldiers more popular and efficient than Max R. Davies, first sergeant of Co. B. His home is at 416 Third Avenue. For four years he was a bookkeeper with the wholesale drug house of Farrand, Williams & Clark, and he says: "I have charged up many thousand orders for Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, but never knew their worth until I used them for the cure of chronic dyspepsia. For two years I suffered and doctored for that aggravating trouble but could only be helped temporarily.

"I think dyspepsia is one of the most stubborn of ailments, and there is scarcely a clerk or office man but what is more or less a victim. Some days I could eat anything, while at other times I would be starving. Those distressed pains would force me to quit work. I have tried many treatments and remedies but they would help only for a time. A friend induced me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, and after taking a few doses I found much relief and after using several boxes I was cured. I know these pills will cure dyspepsia of its worst form and I am pleased to recommend them."—Detroit (Mich.) Journal.

GEN. SHAFTER'S LESSON.

It Was on This Occasion That He Learned to Decide For Himself.

Here is a story that the Cleveland Leader proffers about General Shafter. It centers about his salient trait of being pugnacious, just as all current and well invented anecdotes of "Fighting Bob" Evans revolve around some incandescent bit of profanity. But the story runs thus, as the general is made to tell it:

"Once, when I was a boy at school—I wasn't more than 10 or 11 years old at the time—our teacher called up the class in mental arithmetic and began putting questions, beginning with the pupil at the head of the row and going down toward the foot, until some one could give the correct answer. I stood somewhere near the middle, and next below me was a boy who was three years older and considerably ahead of me in the various studies that we had.

"'How much are 13 and 9 and 8?' the teacher asked.

"While one after another of the boys and girls ahead of me guessed and failed to get it right I figured out what I thought the answer ought to be. The question had almost got to me when I heard the big boy just below me whispering, apparently to himself, but loud enough for me to hear, '29, 29, 29.'

"Finally the pupil above me failed to answer correctly, and then it was my turn.

"'Well, Willie,' said the teacher, 'let's see if you know the answer. Come, now, be prompt.'

"I cocked my head up proudly on one side, cast a triumphant look at those who had 'fallen down' on the problem and said, so that everybody in the schoolroom could hear me:

"'Twenty-nine!'

"'Next. How many are 13 and 9 and 8?

"'Aw!' said the big boy below me, with a look of supreme contempt at the rest of us, '30!'

"That was what I had figured it to be myself, and when the teacher said 'correct' I wanted to fight.

"I didn't assault him, but I made up my mind right there and then to depend on my own judgment in the future, and ever since then when I have had anything to do and had figured out what I considered the best way to do it I have gone ahead, remembering, when people criticised or tried to throw me off the track, how that big boy made a fool of me in the mental arithmetic class."

Dwarfs and Poison.

Henry M. Stanley, in describing his journey though the forests of Africa, says that the most formidable foes he encountered, those that caused the greatest loss of life to his caravan and came nearest to defeating his expedition, were the Wambutti dwarfs.

These diminutive men had only bows and arrows for weapons, so small that they looked like children's playthings, but upon the tip of each tiny arrow was a drop of poison which would kill an elephant or a man as surely and quickly as a rifle. Their defense was by means of poison and traps.

They would steal through the dense forest, and waiting in ambush let fly their arrows before they could be discovered. They dug ditches and carefully covered them over with sticks and leaves. They fixed spikes in the ground and tipped them with poison. Into these ditches and on these spikes man and beast would fall or step to their death. One of the strangest things about it was that their poison was mixed with honey.

Saves Time and Money.

It is delightful weather to breathe fresh, invigorating air, but take care of Lumbago, or else St. Jacobs Oil must take care of it and cure it promptly. It saves time and money.

Using New Files.

An expert in files has given some directions as to the best ways to use these necessary implements. He says that a new file of very high temper should first be used on brass or cast iron. After the first sharpness is gone from it it answers quite as well for wrought iron and steel. Sometimes new files will tear the surface of wrought iron and steel to such an extent as to become very annoying and cause additional work. Very few mechanics thoroughly understand the use of files and the methods by which they are utilized to the greatest advantage. Files bite rolled metal much more quickly and easily than cast, therefore it requires a sharper file for brass and cast iron than for the wrought articles or for steel. If files are gradually adapted to their best uses, they will give much longer service than when they are indiscriminately employed.

"BOOH!"

On afternoons, when baby boy has had a splendid nap,
And sits like any monarch on his throne, in nurse's lap,
In some such wise my handkerchief I hold before my face,
And cautiously and quietly I move about the place;
Then, with a cry, I suddenly expose my face to view,
And you should hear him laugh and crow when I say "Booh!"

Sometimes the rascal tries to make believe that he is scared,
And really, when I first began, he stared, and stared, and stared;
And then his under lip came out and farther out it came,
Till mamma and the nurse agreed it was a "cruel shame"—
But now, what does that same wee, toddling, lisping baby do
But laugh and kick his little heels when I say "Booh!"

He laughs and kicks his little heels in rapturous glee, and then
In shrill, despotic treble bids me "do it all aden!"
And I—of course I do it; for, as his progenitor,
It is such pretty, pleasant play as this that I am for!
And it is, oh, such fun! and I am sure that we shall rue
The time when we are both too old to play the game of "Booh!"

—Eugene Field.

A ROUGH DIAMOND.

I.

"OH, MISS ELSIE, Miss Elsie, the bank has been robbed! Twenty thousand pounds gone, missie! and poor master away! Oh, dear! oh, dear!"

Fully an hour ago had the above words been thrust on pretty little Elsie Maitland's bewildered hearing. She still sat in the exact spot where the bearer of the awful news had left her, too stunned and shocked even yet to properly realize all that the terrible tidings might mean.

Twenty thousand pounds gone! And the bank in a somewhat embarrassed condition before! Worst of all, the banker himself—Elsie's uncle—was away! Elsie Maitland was a brave little woman, but somehow this last dreadful thing had well-nigh robbed her of her bravery.

A step behind her, and a low voice spoke her name. She knew it at once; it was her good-for-nothing brother's. Why had he come here now, bringing fresh trouble? For the first time in her life Elsie felt angry with him.

"Why are you here again, Harold?" she cried, when he was standing there in front of her. "When I gave you that last money you promised to stay away altogether, and try and get something to do. Yet here you are once more, and this time I cannot help you. Why, why do you come? Uncle John would be furious at finding you here."

"But he is away, Elsie," the young man answered, breathlessly. "Girlie, you must help me, just this once. I promise solemnly never to worry you again!"

"You have promised solemnly before, Harold," his sister said, bitterly. "I cannot help you, I say. We are all ruined. The bank has been robbed."

The startled look on his white face caused her to cease speaking.

"Is it true, Elsie?" he asked, hoarsely. "Has the bank really been robbed?"

She told him what she knew, he listening impatiently.

"I must have money, girlie!" he burst out. "I must have it! I must get away from here to-night, and I don't possess a single farthing! Quick, dear. Uncle left you some for housekeeping. That will have to do."

"I don't possess a single farthing, either," she persisted. "What is the matter, Harold? Why is it so terribly necessary for you to leave Blackmore to-night?"

Their eyes met—hers clear, straightforward, honest; his weak and nervous.

"Uncle will be coming back to see about the bank, Elsie," he muttered, queerly. "He must not find me here."

No, it would only add to the bitterness of his return. But what could she do?

"I have it!" the desperate brother suddenly exclaimed. "Elsie, this news about the bank robbery is still exclusive. The editor of the Blackmore Times would give you any sum for it. He is enterprising, and always ready for something startling at first hand. This is our only chance, dear."

But Elsie would not see it in that light for a long, long time. It was not until her brother had fully enlarged on the grim necessity of the case, not until he had forced her to plainly understand the consequences if he did not have money at once, that she finally consented to go to the editor of the Blackmore Times.

Harold Maitland had a smart, cunning tongue; on this occasion he had indeed used it well. As he prophesied, the editor literally grabbed at the "copy," especially after he had fairly convinced himself that his would be the first paper to publish the startling news on the morrow. Elsie went wearily home with the much-needed money in her pocket. Harold was waiting in hiding for her, and pounced down eagerly on the gold.

II.

An hour after his departure their uncle's manager came to the house, and asked to see Elsie. When he was admitted into her presence he noticed with a sharp pang how wan and desolate her little face had grown.

Poor child! Such things as these were hard for her to bear. How he wished that he could save her all care and annoyance in the future! For with the whole of his stout, loyal heart he loved her.

He showed her a telegram which he had received from her uncle.

"Returning at once," it said. "Keep news of robbery out of the papers at any price till I see you."

Elsie read the words, or, rather, they chased each other before her dizzy, aching eyes. She suddenly tottered forward and fell in a dead faint.

Next morning huge posters appeared from the offices of the Blackmore Times, making public the robbery. Newsboys shouted it frantically from one street to another. Soon a big crowd had gathered outside the bank, clamoring loudly for the doors to be opened.

They wanted their money back, their hard-won earnings, and they meant to get it. That exclusive news sold by Elsie Maitland on the previous evening to the editor of the Blackmore Times had caused an appalling run on her uncle's bank.

The doors were opened at last; the crowd surged in, presenting checks to the full amount they had deposited in the bank. They looked astonished when the gold same over the counter in their direction. Clearly they had expected to be turned away penniless. They thanked their stars for being the first. The bank could not go on paying out for long, of that they felt sure.

At noon Elsie and her uncle drove up to the front entrance in an open carriage. He had insisted on her accompanying him, despite the fact that she looked wretchedly pale and ill.

All the way along they had seen those hideous posters announcing the robbery.

"How did they get the news?" John Rivers kept repeating. "Elsie, child, how did they get the news? It is a mystery to me. If only it could have been kept from them another twenty-four hours I could have weathered the storm."

Poor Elsie's heart ached.

"I have done it!" she cried. "The fault is mine—mine! Oh, Harold, if only I could have foreseen all this! If only I could have foreseen it all!"

III.

As yet Elsie had not told her uncle who supplied the news to the paper. She prayed fervently that she might be able to keep the knowledge to herself forever, safely hidden from the fond old man who believed in her. Fate would decide.

For hours she sat in a little room over the bank, listening to the persistent clamorings below for gold.

How much longer could it go on?

"Not much longer!" John Rivers said dejectedly to his suffering niece. "Not much longer, Elsie, my girl. They must have paid it nearly all out by now. Soon they will have to close the doors. Don't cry, child. It is the will of Providence, I suppose; but it's hard to get such a blow as this at my time of life!"

Presently there were sounds of cheering in the street. A well-known millionaire had driven up to the bank.

"My God!" muttered the old banker. "This is the last straw! Reginald Fairfax has turned against me with the rest; when he has withdrawn his money there won't be a penny left!"

"Go and see him, uncle," Elsie pleaded. "He is so rich he might be persuaded to leave it."

"No, child. I could not speak to him or anyone else to-day."

"Then I will, uncle. Oh, do go and send him here to me! I must see him! Reginald will save us!"

John Rivers went blindly out, and Elsie waited for Reginald Fairfax to come to her. Twice this self-made man had asked her to marry him; twice she had refused. He was rich, but he was also coarse. Life with him would be a nightmare, she had always told herself. She did not love him.

But now——

He was standing there in front of her, loudly dressed, and looking more commonplace and vulgar than ever. How could she appeal to this boorish pervenu? She must, though; she had worked the mischief, and she must right it if possible.

At the end of another five minutes she was telling him everything—all about her brother and her selling the news of the robbery to the editor. He listened in silence. She humbled herself to the dust before him, and begged him not to withdraw his money from the bank.

He smiled queerly.

"You twice asked me to be your wife," she wound up, feverishly, "and I refused you. Would you still marry me, Mr. Fairfax! Oh, do answer! If I said 'yes,' would you still marry me?"

The smile broadened.

"Am I to understand that you are proposing to me, Miss Maitland?" he asked.

"Don't seek to humble me any more; don't, don't!" she cried. "I have fallen far enough!"

"Yes," he said; "it must indeed be a terrible fall for the proud Miss Maitland to offer herself to me! You offer to become my wife if I will only leave my money in your uncle's bank. Considering that I love you—and that you love someone else—it is rather hard on me, isn't it?"

"Oh, don't, don't! If you only knew how I loathe myself for having said all this to you! You are quite right to refuse me. How dare I ask you—or any man—to take me under such conditions? You are quite right to refuse me."

"I don't know," he answered, slowly. "If you did not love another man already it might have been different. But as it is—yes, I certainly won't marry you, Miss Maitland; you have humbled yourself to me unnecessarily. You cannot know me very well when you imagine that I had come to withdraw my support from your uncle at such a time as this. Instead, I had merely come to place the further sum of £50,000 to my account. The public knows it already, and the paying into the bank of such a large sum has restored confidence."

Ere she had time to speak he was gone.

But the bank was saved! The bank was saved! A man she had always despised in her heart had come forward and saved it. Why—why had she never been able before to see the fine nature which lurked beneath a somewhat boorish exterior?

The excitement of that day was followed by a long illness for her. When she returned to life once more it was to find her uncle in better spirits than she could ever remember him.

"All the doing of Reginald Fairfax, Elsie, my girl!" the old banker said, gleefully. "He stuck to me right through, child, when everyone else failed me, and his example saved the bank."

He had further persuaded old John Rivers to make a partner of his long-trusted manager. He was therefore in a position at last to ask Elsie's hand in marriage. When he asked her she answered "Yes."

Some months after their marriage Elsie received another visit from her brother Harold. He was altogether a different person. He was going to America, and had come to make a confession to her.

He had sold his knowledge of their uncle and the bank to a certain gang of thieves for a large sum of money. But he had never known a happy minute since, and he had never touched a farthing of the ill-gotten cash. He was going to America now, to start life in earnest, and when his sister asked him where he had found the necessary funds he told her that the donor was Reginald Fairfax.—Chicago Times-Herald.

The United States fisheries commission has investigated the Florida alligator and reported that unless steps are taken to protect this water animal from hunters it will soon be as completely exterminated as is the American buffalo. The alligator is hunted for its skin and for sport, and its combined enemies have greatly reduced the number of animals seen annually in the waters and marshes of Florida. It is estimated that not many years will pass before the Florida alligator will disappear entirely, unless the government interferes.

In the old days of wooden ships the boring insects which live in wood were their chief foes. Teakwood acquired its reputation as a ship-building material because of its supposed immunity from these vermin. Steel ships suffer from barnacles, which foul their bottoms much more rapidly than they do wooden ones. These strange marine growths are sometimes as big as one's fist and adhere to the metal plates with tremendous force, and besides impeding the ship themselves, they catch sea grass and other rubbish and drag it through the water. When a dry dock is not available metal ships have to have their bottoms cleaned by divers. When the battleship Massachusetts was recently cleaned barnacles and grass covered her hull to such an extent that she could not have made more than ten and one-half knots an hour.

American Street Railways.

Street railway statistics of an interesting nature are given in the American Street Railway Directory. From these it appears that there is a total of 1,074 street railways in the United States, made up of 909 electric, 21 cable, 31 steam and 113 horse lines. These have a total capital stock of $975,625,827, and are bonded for $527,970,220. The total track mileage amounts to 16,466.78, of which 14,673.71 is electric, 485.68 cable, 618.54 steam and 688.85 horse. In their operation are required 48,209 cars, 32,696 of which are motor cars, 7,824 trailers, 2,920 cable, 1,887 steam and 2,882 horse. In addition there are 610 steam locomotives and 3,504 horses.

Knew Naught of Taxgatherers.

Many and strange are the discoveries which are occasionally made in the outlying districts of the dominions of the great white czar. But it is somewhat of a novelty that an entire village should recently have been discovered of the existence of which no one seems to have had any idea. Deep in the forests of the Ural the authorities have discovered a flourishing village, the inhabitants of which speak a curious language of their own and seem to form a sort of ideal commonwealth, in which taxes and taxgatherers, among other troublesome things, are unheard of. This latter defect, however, is now to be remedied.

Kitchener's Railway.

English capitalists are already preparing to buy the railroad which Sir Herbert Kitchener has built in the wake of his army practically as far as Omdurman. The gauge is the same as that of the line from Cape Town to Buluwayo, which before long will be extended to Lake Tanganyika.

NAPOLEON'S ORIGINAL PLAN TO INVADE ENGLAND.

NAPOLEON'S FLOATING FORTRESS.

A German historian now comes forward with the remarkable statement that he has discovered Napoleon's original plans for the invasion of England in the year 1798. Just 100 years ago Napoleon decided to tow an army over to England on great floating forts, with large bodies of troops lined up in battle order. They were then to fight their way ashore and land on the coast without resort to lighters. The troops were to march ashore in the order of their regiments, preceded and backed up by artillery. This, the German historian says, Bonaparte hoped to accomplish in the summer season, when the water was calm and the attending circumstances favored by wind and weather.

It will be remembered that Napoleon has often declared that he would have been as great an admiral as he was a general with half a chance. "But," he added, "the French are useless as sailors. They are too fussy, too excitable. At sea one needs a calm mind, quiet fortitude and energy." Bonaparte's ferries were built in Brest, Cherbourg and Boulogne, but when Napoleon inspected them in the spring of 1798 his faith in the new-fangled monsters wavered.

He abandoned the proposed invasion of England and instead started on the expedition to Egypt, from where he hoped to be able to rule the Mediterranean.

QUEEN AGAINST HER WILL.

A Tragic Romance of the South Sea Islands.

The schooner Ocean Spray, Capt. Luttrell commanding, recently arrived at San Francisco from an extended trading cruise in the Southern Pacific. The Captain bore the news of the death of the Queen of the Muna Islands. A stranger story never was told.

According to a special dispatch from San Francisco to the New York Herald, many years ago William Young, an English sailor on a little trading schooner that had sailed from an Australian port, was shipwrecked and cast ashore on one of the Muna Islands. Long struggling had swept away nearly all his clothing, but he managed to cling to a piece of timber until with it he was thrown up on shore in safety. It was night when he landed on the beach and realized that he was safe. Then he swooned away. The next thing he knew he was on a comfortable cot in a native's cabin, and around him were a number of dusky barbarians who, unaccustomed to seeing a man having a white skin, had taken him for a god and were entertaining him as best they could. In a few days he began to recover sufficiently to appreciate the situation, and it is needless to say that he enjoyed it. Favors of every description were bestowed upon him. By the decree of the King a palace was appointed for his habitation, and here he continued to receive the attention of the great chiefs of the islands. In a short time he learned the native language and invented many contrivances to gain and retain the homage of the people. He soon became a favorite on the islands and in time became strongly attached to a young sister of the King. Then followed the marriage of the god and the princess. The union was a happy one, and in the course of time a daughter was born and she was named Margaret. She was a beautiful child, and naturally was the idol of her father. He taught her to read and write English, and when she had attained years of understanding he sent her to a convent school at Samoa.

Margaret pursued her studies in the convent about four years, and during that time she fell in love with a handsome young Samoan, who, at the completion of her course, begged for an immediate marriage. The young lady was agreeable to the marriage, but asked the privilege of returning to her father at her old home before the ceremony should take place. The next trading vessel that sailed from Samoa carried her to her old home.

She had only been there a few weeks when the King was taken suddenly ill and shortly afterwards died. When the grief of the nation had subsided the wise men and councillors began to look around for a successor. There were several sons and daughters of the deceased monarch living, but according to a peculiar custom of the people the eldest nephew or niece of the late ruler succeeded to the throne. Margaret was the regular and legitimate successor according to this rule. She was well aware of this, and at the first report of the King's illness had made an effort to get away from the islands, but there was no vessel by which she could escape. She had promised her young Samoan chief that in six months she would return and become his wife. Now her prospects were blighted. She was a prisoner, although an heir to a crown. Although a queen, she knew her life would be a living death. The constitution of the islands consisted in a code of unwritten laws, one of the most stringent of which was that the Queen could never marry or even look upon the face of a man. The palace was so constructed that one could not see beyond its walls from within, and the royal attendants were all maidens. Every day the wise men and councillors sought the advice of their sovereign on bended knees with their foreheads upon the ground and a partition shutting off the view of royalty. The rules governing sovereigns were inexorable. Nothing, even death itself, could change a law. It was to such a life as this the beautiful young Margaret was doomed. When she was sought to take her place as the sovereign of the people she protested and declined the office. But there was no getting rid of the responsibility. She was Queen by right, and she must be Queen in fact. They brought her against her will into the palace, the inaugural ceremonies were performed, and she was initiated into the seclusion of a palace that in reality was a prison. Although the first lady of the realm, she did not enjoy the privileges or freedom of the meanest slave.

It was about three years ago that she became Queen, and since that time one can only fancy the life of sorrow she must have lived. Only once was she outside the palace walls in those three years, and that was to attend the funeral of her father.

A bamboo box was made in which she was carried to the graveside. The sides of the cage were thickly thatched with palm leaves, preventing her from seeing anything that was going on outside. Near the top of the bamboo structure were ventilation openings, but these were so screened that she could not see out. At the grave she could hear the clods falling upon the coffin lid, but could see nothing. She could hear the moans and wails of the mourners, but received no real sympathy. When the grave was closed in she was carried back to her prison and her life of hopeless loneliness. That was about a year ago.

Some weeks ago the Ocean Spray was driven out of her course and stranded on the shores of Muna Island. The natives swarmed around and welcomed the whites. They told the captain of the illness of their Queen, and he, knowing something of the circumstances, secured permission for his wife to see the Queen. From his wife's report he concluded that the unfortunate royal prisoner was merely suffering from a cold. He prepared some medicine for her from his chest and gave it to the chiefs, saying that it was only a cold, and if they followed his directions and gave the medicine she would be all right.

They accepted the medicine with a great show of gratitude, went away, called a council of chiefs, and after long and careful deliberation decided that it would be dangerous to give her the white man's medicine. If she had a cold the proper remedy was an application of heat. The priests built a number of fires on the beach. The Queen was carried out in the bamboo cage, and amid the loud wails of the priests and cries of the assembled people it was placed in the center of the circle of fires. Fresh fuel was piled on and the heat became more intense. The poor Queen cried for help, but no help came. All one night and during the greater part of the next day the cold-curing ceremony was kept up, and then all was still within the cage. Calls to the Queen brought no answer, and the chiefs and priests knew that the cure had been a success. Amid shouts of jubilation the box was carried to the palace gate, delivered to the attendants and dragged into the secluded interior. Soon a piercing shriek came from the Queen's apartments, and almost immediately two atendants ran out screaming, "The Queen is dead! She is dead!" Instantly all was confusion. The priests chanted themselves hoarse and the people gave vent to their sorrow in long, loud sobs and wails. Several old women were sent in to investigate. They came out shortly bearing the lifeless body that all might see. The intense heat and choking smoke had suffocated the unfortunate woman as she lay in the closed box.

Impurities About the Home.

The careless disposal of the slops and debris about the home is one of the most ruinous practices in vogue by the farmer and his family. Impurities about the home bring disease by filling the air with microbes or disease germs. All impurities should be emptied in a keg or a barrel that doesn't leak, and wheeled away and poured on the grass, and not in the same place twice. The barrel or keg should be cleansed weekly with carbolic acid and lime. Cleanliness is next to Godliness. It is next to healthfulness, too. The premises about the house cannot be kept too clean and free of slops, etc. Vermin breed diseases very rapidly and with awful effect. Keep the home and all the appurtenances thereof clean and pure, and keep clean yourself.—Practical Farmer.

AN HISTORIC HOUSE.

Building Where the Famous Boston Tea Party Met 125 Years Ago.

The last private house that was directly connected with the episode of the Boston tea party in the great struggle for liberty has been torn down to make room for a business block. The old Bradlee house, for as such it is known, has stood at the corner of Tremont and Hollis streets for 127 years, and the land, which when the building was built was a part of a pasture, is today worth $100,000.

The house was one of the most interesting historic landmarks in Boston. In its wide old kitchen the ringleaders of the Boston tea party disguised themselves as Indians on the evening of Dec. 16, 1773, before going to the wharf where the cargo of tea was thrown into the waters of the harbor. The Old South Church and Faneuil Hall are the only two buildings besides this house now left that sheltered the patriots on that eventful day.

Although built in 1771, the house was strong enough to stand together another 100 years, and it would doubtless have been left as a landmark were it not for the city's growth around it. The land comprised in its site and the yard have risen so much in value that a building productive of proportionate revenue must be put up to meet the increase in taxes.

NEW TRAINING VESSEL.

Practice Ship Chesapeake Will Cost to Build $125,000.

A fine new training vessel or practice ship for the United States navy is under way. She will be called the Chesapeake and will cost to build $125,000. It will be propelled by steam and sail and will accommodate at once 180 cadets of the naval academy.

The Chesapeake is to be fitted with all the modern appliances for service and comfort and will be constructed entirely of steel, the bottom will be sheathed with yellow pine four inches in thickness, from keel to two feet two inches above the water line, and coppered. The main battery, six four-inch rapid-fire rifles, will be on the covered gun deck; four six-pounders rapid fire and two one-pounders will be mounted on the rail and worked from the flush spar deck.

A full ship rig will be provided, the lower masts and lower yards to be of steel, the balance of the spars to be of spruce or yellow pine. The bulwark plating in connection with the stem is carried out to form the bowsprit. The total sail area is 19,975 square feet, the vessel depending wholly upon the sails for propulsion.

The principal dimensions of the vessels are: Length on load water line, 175 feet; breadth on load water line, thirty-seven feet; draft, mean, 16 feet 6 inches; displacement, 1,175 tons.

A Very Old Pear Tree.

There is in Mt. Auburn Cemetery, near the city of Cambridge, a very old pear tree that is believed to have stood more than 250 years. Its trunk is nine feet in circumference near the ground, but has for years been hollow, and to protect it from storms a great mass of cement has been put in the hollow to give it weight. The tree continues thrifty, and each year produces a crop of pears. Last year's crop was a light one. This year's is much better.

Salt and Health.

G. Godfrey Gumel, the scientist, is about to publish a book upon the effects of salt in the human body. Twenty years' study has led him to believe that diphtheria, apoplexy and other diseases are due to a deficiency of salt.

A very old man is never satisfied until he drives a skittish colt.

SHEAR NONSENSE

Ella—"Where does Bella get her good looks from—her father or her mother?" Stella—"From her father. He keeps a drug-store."—Household Words.

"Yes, sir," said the man in Cell 711, "time was when I was admitted to the very best houses." "And what brought you here?" "They caught me coming out."—Tit-Bits.

Bacon—What do you think of the war so far? Egbert—Well, I think if the American eagle isn't hoarse it must have an unusually strong throat.—Yonkers Statesman.

"The war," she said, reflectively, "brought about, or at least hurried, a great many marriages." "True," he replied, "but why dwell on the horrors of war?"—Chicago Post.

"That book will repay perusal." "Is that so?" "When I started in on it I had insomnia dreadfully; but after reading it two evenings I found myself sleeping like an infant."

Young Poet—Why do you refuse me as a son-in-law? Is it because I lack merit? Paterfamilias—Oh, no; it is simply on account of lack of space. We are really crowded for room here now.—Judge.

Jobson—Just see how hard Dobson is working at beating that carpet. Mrs. Jobson—Yes. Mrs. Dobson sets him at work at something of the kind just after he reads the war news in the papers.—Brooklyn Life.

Dolly—Papa, do they get salt out of Salt Lake? Papa—Yes, my dear, large quantities. Dolly—And ink out of the Black Sea? Papa—No; now keep quiet. Dolly—Yessir—Are there any women on the Isle of Man?—Truth.

Angry Wife—It seems to me we've been married a century. I can't even remember when or where we first met. Husband (emphatically)—I can. It was at a dinner party where there were thirteen at table.—Chicago Daily News.

Mrs. Gabb—Are you going to have your darter take music lessons? Mrs. Gadd—N-o, I guess not. She hain't no ear for music. Mrs. Gabb—Well, I wouldn't be discouraged at that; mebby she might learn to play classic, anyhow.—New York Weekly.

"I am astonished," said the scoffer, "to hear you compare our glorious country to a small boy getting his face washed." "Me?" said the oratorical patriot. "How? When?" "When you said it was impossible for the nation to stand still."—Indianapolis Journal.

"Lawd! Lawd!" exclaimed a pious colored brother, "but ain't de Bible comin' true ev'y day! Ain't we got a Sampson fightin' fer us? En ain't de word come clear 'cross de ocean dat de Nunited States flag waves over de Phillistines?"—Atlanta Constitution.

After the Correction.—Papa—Now, Johnny, I have whipped you only for your own good. I believe I have only done my duty. Tell me truly, what do you think yourself? Johnny—If I should tell you what I think you'd give me another whipping.—Boston Transcript.

Mrs. Younglove—These women who write about "How Husbands Should Be Managed"—do you suppose they manage their husbands any better than we do? Mrs. Elders—Do I——? Why, pshaw! child, don't you know they haven't any husbands?—Brooklyn Life.

True.—"What do you think of my husband's poems, professor?" "I think they will be read when those of Milton and Longfellow are forgotten." "How nice of you! But you are saying that only to please me, I'm afraid." "Nay, madam, I do but speak the simple truth."—Truth.

Maude—I see you with Charley Tommins a good deal. I begin to think you like him better than your soldier boy, Fred. Carrie—Charley is nicer one way. He is so good, you know. He writes all my letters to Fred. That's something Freddy never did. I used to have to write them myself."—Boston Transcript.

Scene—Suburban Villa.—Mistress—Did any one call while I was out? Servant—No one, ma'am, exceptin' a tramp. He wanted somethin' to eat, but I told him there was nothin' ready, an' he'd have to wait till the leddy of the house gets back from the cookin' school, an' mebbe she'd make him somethin'. Mistress—Of all things! Did he wait? Servant—No, ma'am, he runned!

"Now," said the fussy old gentleman, putting one of the biggest berries in his mouth and picking up another, "what is the sense of having that sign read 'Fresh strawberries for sale?' Don't you see that 'Fresh strawberries' would be enough? Don't you suppose that everybody knows they are for sale?" "I dunno," answered the grocer; "some folks seem to think I'm givin' them away." And the old gentleman put the berry back in the box.—Boston Herald.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.,

FRIDAY, JANUARY 13.....1899

From accounts which have been printed of the attempts in Congress to reorganize the army, it is not going to be such an easy matter to eliminate politics as has been surmised by outside spectators. Two plans have been presented, and one of them, which is embodied in what is known as the Hull bill, is received with greatest favor. General Miles plan for eighty-three regiments and a general staff and many high-titled officers has been practically rejected by the military committee of the House of Representatives Mr. Hull proposes to increase the number of enlisted men in each company to 145; he also proposes to enlarge themedical corps from 902 to nearly 4,000 officers and men. An interesting feature of his measure which relates to our colonial interests is found in the fact that the bill increases the pay of all soldiers who serve in subtropical countries about 25 per cent. But the weak point in the Hull bill and in that proposed by General Miles is found in the large increase of vacancies in the liner General Miles proposed the creation of 2,350 officers. West Point could not fill these places, it has been estimated, in thirty years; therefore large numbers of the officers would have to be selected from the ranks of militia men and civilians. Mr. Hull's bill does not provide for the appointment of so many officers, but it creates a large number of places which will have to be filled by volunteers and politicians. It has been charged by no less an authority than the Baltimore "Sun" that each member of the House of Representatives has been offered the appointment of a Lieutenant for his vote in favor of the bill. Of course, in the event of the passage of a measure like this, there would be a scramble for appointments, and the filling of the Army register with large numbers of untrained civilians and incompetents. Fortunately we are not in any immediate danger of having another war, but if one should come along before these civilians become thoroughly inured to their duties, we will have a repetition of the campaign in Florida and Cuba. Mr. Hull ignores the general-staff idea, which is, probably, the greatest need of the American army. His measure retains the present commissary organization, which is, probably, the worst that could be devised. Perhaps it is vain to hope that politics will be eliminated from the army. Certainly the Hull Bill gives no such promise.

A writer in the Hanford Journal demands referendum, and for cause he tells us that statistics show that there are fifty seven old line insurance companies, rome of which have been in operation fifty years and that they have drawn from their patrons $1,350,000,000 in profits and that their combined income equals the world's production of gold. But he does not take the trouble to tell us wherein referendum would diminish the income of these companies. Of the danger of great accumulations of wealth there can be no doubt, but how and when to put on the brake is the question that has puzzled greater minds than the average man who would have to act under any referendum. It has been the puzzle of the greatest minds from the times of Lycurgus to this hoar. It is one thing to see an evil—quite another to apply a remedy. By a vote of a majority of the American people we "protect" the men who have this vast start and make the poor pay not only the burdens of the government, but millions upon millions to these people. It is by referendum that these same companies are exempt from taxgion of any kind. The people have a square vote on that proposition every two years, and they keep on voting in favor of the exemption—keep on voting in favor of laws by which one man is to be "protected" and in getting rich at the expense of the great masses. Referendum, then, is not his remedy.

Senator White will vote against the expansion policy now being vigorously urged by the Jingoes end Senator Perkins says he will do the same thing unless the legislature of California instructs him to do otherwise. Senator White is undoubtedly the greatest statesman ever produced by the Pacific Coast and Senator Perkins is a business man of unusual ability. The members of the California legislature may have more brains than our United States Senators, but there is room for considerable doubt on the question, and we think Senator White will be justified in refusing to be guided by their alleged wisdom.

In addition to the stock of old worries left over, is already announced that in '99 that a crack "in the bottom of the sea" is liable to cause the immediate precipitation of the entire volume of the oceans to the center of the earth, causing so violent an eruption as to destroy all life. Sir Robert Ball of London, an astronomer of repute, announces this latest disquieting possibility, which, were it to occur, would doubtless interfere with mining and scientific progress to an unsatisfactory extent.

Dan Burns bossed the Republican party when Swift was nominated for Governor in 1886 and his leadership has been unquestioned since that date. If he is good enough to name State tickets he ought to be good enough for United States Senator.

A Cleveland, O., Judge has decided that the proper time for a young man to leave the house with whom he is keeping company should be regulated entirely by the price of wood.

Ordinance No. 64.

The Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo, State of California, Do Ordain As Follows:

SECTION 1. Every male person over the age of twenty-one and under fifty-five years of age, found in each Road District in the County of Inyo, State of California, between the first day of March, 1899, and the thirty first day of December, 1899, excepting all persons who were honorably discharged from service in the army or navy of the United States, at any time between the first day of April, in the year A. D. 1861, and the first day of September, A. D. 1865, and who have not paid the same in some other road district, must pay to the said County of Inyo, a Road Poll Tax of Two Dollars provided the same be paid before the first Monday in July, but if not paid prior to the first Monday in July then it shall be Three Dollars.

SECTION 2. Said Road Poll Tax shall be collected by the Assessor of the said County of Inyo, in the same manner that State Poll Taxes are collected, and shall be paid to the Treasurer of the said County of Inyo, and shall be placed to the credit of the several Road Districts of the said County of Inyo from which said Road Poll Tax was collected.

SECTION 3. This ordinance shall take effect and be in force from and after fifteen days from its passage, and all Ordinances and parts of ordinances of said Board in conflict herewith, are hereby repealed.

SECTION 4. This ordinance shall be published with the names of the members of said Board of Supervisors voting for and against the same, in the Inyo Independent, a newspaper published in the said County of Inyo, at least one week; said publication to be made for said time and before the expiration of said fifteen days

A. C. FREEMAN,
{SEAL} Chairman of the Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo, State of California.

Attest: D. J. HESSION,
Clerk of said Board of Supervisors.

The above and foregoing ordinance, No. 60, was duly passed, enacted and ordained by the Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo, State of California, at a regular meeting of said Board on the 5th day of January, 1899, by the following vote:

Ayes: N. J. Cooley, Jas. Jones, T. H. Henebry, J. J. Stewart, A. C. Freeman.

Resolved, that we the Board of Supervisors find that there have been a number of warrants of arrest issued by Justices of the Peace without a sufficient showing for the issuance of the same, which have entailed much unnecessary expense upon the County by way of constable and other fees.

Therefore, we hereby instruct the District Attorney to notify in writing the Justices of Peace of this County to issue warrants of arrests only after a careful examination of the informant or prosecutor and any witnesses he may produce, of prescribed by Section 811 of the Penal Code, and call the attention of the Justices to Section 1447 of said Code, which provides that when the Court finds that the prosecution is malicious and without probable cause, it may order the prosecution to pay the costs of the action or to give satisfactory security for the payment of the same, and also to call their attention to Section 170 of the same Code which provides that "Every person who maliciously and without probable cause procures a search warrant or warrant of arrest to be issued and executed, is guilty of a misdemeanor."

Ordered that the sum of $140 67 be set aside out of the Bridge fund subject to the order of Supervisor N. J. Cooley for bridge lumber.

Ordered that the sum of $62 06 be transferred from the General Road fund to the Bridge fund.

The following claims for per diem of members of the Board of Supervisors were examined, approved by the District Attorney and warrants ordered drawn on the Salary fund as follows:

Ballarat News

Four 12-horse teams loaded with machinery for Harrison & Co.'s new mill have arrived at Ballarat. The mill will have ten stamps and is located about a mile and a half above the Anthony mill in Pleasant canyon. A tramway one and one quarter miles long will be built from the mine to the mill and water will be piped two and a half miles. Michigan capitaltsts are interested in the concern.

Charley Anthoney will start his mill on ore from the recent rich strike in his mine.

The Ballarat mill will soon start up on ore from the Montgomery Bros. mine in Tuber canyon.

There are quite a number of cases of la grippe in town. Our Deputy Sheriff Cole has been wrestling with it for a month.

LATER ON.

To The Public.

During the many years we have been doing business with you we have never made a practice of advertising fake sales. We have concluded to make some important changes in our business, and in consequence offer our entire stock at actual cost for cash. This sale will continue for ninety days and will be without reserve. This is an opportunity never before offered the people of Inyo and should be taken advantage of. At the end of the time specified we shall announce some radical changes in our business. Thanking you for the generous patronage you have accorded us and soliciting its continuance, we remain,

Yours Respectfully,
N. RHINE.

There will be no growling about lack of water supply next year. The recent fall of snow was very heavy in the mountains, and there is more of the beautiful piled up there now than at any time for the past three years. It rained and snowed alternately for two days this week, and the ground is pretty well wet, and the end is not yet. There is certain to be a still heavier snow fall next month.

The following named young men from Burbank, Los Angeles County arrived at Independence last Saturday. W. Warfield, George Dewey, Thomas Watson, Fred Hazmalhalch and Charles R. Thompson. They are looking for a place to locate and will travel all through the county.

The Age of an Oyster.

It is just as easy to tell the age of an oyster by looking at its shell as it is to ascertain the age of a horse by examining its teeth, or a tree by inspecting the circles revealed by the ax or saw when it is laid low. When the oyster is 6 months old, it is as big as a dime; when 1 year old, it will cover a silver half dollar, and when 2 years old, will be about the circumference of a silver dollar.

The oyster, unlike the crab, is not obliged to seek new quarters or build a new house every time he grows appreciably. The extensions that he puts on his house are clearly marked by a well defined ridge.

Oysters are esteemed to be at their best when between 4 and 5 years of age, and the planters endeavor to protect the beds for that length of time. Conscientious oyster men—that is, men who are not inclined to kill the goose that lays the golden egg—always return to the bed oysters that are too young, but in case a patriarch is brought up, over whose shell the tides of from 8 to 12 winters and summers have ebbed and flowed, he is sent to market, where he is put at the bottom of the heap and sold with his younger and more luscious companions.—Pearson's Weekly.

THE SLOOP CUP.

THERE were only two days remain- before the Bay-head regatta, and up to 3 o'clock, Thursday afternoon the one rival to Dave Garrison's "Fleetwing," that every one wanted to see, had not yet registered at the Yacht Club.

Naturally the bunch of fellows lounging on the pier head Friday morning and lazily criticising the regatta fleet as it swung at anchor, burst into interested comment as a long slim boat slid past them down the harbor and stood out before the heavy wind under full canvas.

"Hello! that's Thorne's boat now, isn't it?" exclaimed Joe Scott, dropping from his seat on the rail and hurrying over to the other side of the pier, with the boys at his heels. "Yes, there's her name, 'Conqueror.' She must have come in last night. I didn't know her at first; look at the big topsail he's got on her."

"She's been made over for this race, I tell you, it'll take hot work for even the 'Fleetwing' to beat her now."

"I wonder what Dave 'll say when he hears that his beloved rival is here."

"Here comes Dave now."

"Whoop! Hello! Heard the news?" roared the half dozen voices that had been disputing as a white hat came slowly down the wharf.

"What's the row?" asked the newcomer, calmly taking a seat on the rail beside Joe. "Anything fatal happened in the last ten minutes?"

"Thorne's here with a new set of sails on the 'Conqueror,'" blurted out Joe, who never could keep anything long.

"Thorne!" interrupted Dave, a black look on his good-natured face. "So he's come after all."

"Hasn't he, though; it will take your prettiest sailing to show him your stern."

"If I decide to race him," answered Dave, slowly watching the boat as it dwindled oceanward.

"Nonsense, Davie!" "The idea, old fellow." "Goodness sake, man, you wouldn't drop out for that," argued every one at once while Joe, who was Dave's particular chum, and dared anything, added: "Then you'll let Thorne take the cup? Your two are the fastest boats in the class."

Dave said nothing, but his mouth narrowed to the long, thin line the boys knew so well.

Ever since the two had been old enough to have boats, there had been a rivalry growing up between them, slowly changing their friendship to enmity, and ending the year before in accusation and open distrust.

"I'd rather have him take the cup than think I wanted it bad enough to race him for it," said Dave, shortly.

"Oh, fudge, then he'll think you're afraid of him," laughed Joe, throwing his arm over Dave's shoulder. "What you want to do is to go in and beat him clean out of his boots; take a little more ballast if it's too windy and show him the way home."

"Maybe," answered the other, a far-away look in his quiet blue eyes. "I suppose it is the only fair thing to do," he said to himself as he walked home. "Better race and have it over. I only hope this wind will shift before to-morrow." And he glanced toward the northwest, whence a merry gale piped along.

For with all her virtues the "Fleetwing" could not make time in a stiff breeze. She could beat anything in a light southwester with Dave at the helm, for no man could sail a boat as craftily as he.

Sidney Thorne knew Dave's skill and the "Fleetwing's" powers, too, and he hoped as earnestly for a "reefing gale" as Dave prayed for a catspaw breeze, with better luck, unhappily for Dave.

"I'm afraid we're going to get more of this," said Joe Scott, anxiously, as he stood on the "Fleetwing's" deck Saturday morning and felt the puffy north wind that rolled the little sloop heavily in the trough of the waves.

"It will be dirty work getting round the 'pudding stone reef' in this choppy sea."

"If we can make the first leg on this breeze, I'll have the wind behind me on the next, and it's only a short beat home from the second buoy," answered Dave, with a sort of nervous quietness. "Hurry up there, Joe, I never saw you take so long."

"Here, belay that, and stop your fussing," retorted Joe, throwing down a rope. "You can't race this race alone; I heard Thorne saying that as this wind would hold there was no hurry about starting."

The hard look on Dave's face deepened as he went on with his work. So busy were the two boys in talking that they did not hear their names called by childish voices, nor see a skiff that was paddled past them by unskillful little hands.

"Thorne isn't going to have an easy time taking care of that topsail of his," remarked Joe, looking up from the halyard he was hauling in.

"Say, Joe, let Thorne take care of himself; we've got all we can do to manage right here; just run forrard and keep her off the pier, will you?" answered Dave, in a tone that made his mate lift his eyebrows and whistle silently.

"Funny how mad fighting will make a man," he said to himself, as Dave snapped out orders to the boys as they tumbled on board from the pier where they had been waiting.

Dave was in a fighting mood. He felt his boat tugging to get away, and he saw the "Conqueror" wiggling along behind him as Thorne tried to get to windward at the starting line. "Joe," he ordered quickly, "I'm going to gybe up on the windward of Thorne; be ready with the sheet. You fellows ballast her now. All ready. It's going to be close sailing all the way," he said to himself, as one after another the boats slid over the line, "Conqueror" and "Fleetwing" side by side.

Closer sailing than he thought even. In spite of the "Fleetwing's" promising start and the master hand on her wheel, the lee rail sank under water and the white sails, swelling like a swan's breast, strained in vain to keep ahead of the black-hulled boat that was using all the wind its sails could find.

Joe looked at the long ripple of water swirling continuously over the rail and shook his head. "It's not our fault, Davie, we can't run against the weather, old fellow," he said, gently, knowing his captain's thoughts.

They were all silent as the bigger boat tore along beside them, the sea snoring heavily under her prow like the deep laugh of a sea creature. It would mean so much to win that race. Both boys felt that more depended on it than they had thought—whoever won the cup won something else with it. And somehow Dave couldn't help feeling that Thorne would do anything rather than be defeated. "Just see if he doesn't do something queer before this is over," he thought as they swept on over the rolling, windy sea. "Just wait, though, until I get around that first buoy with the wind behind me. I've a chance yet, and it's changing to the east already."

Poor Dave, not a great chance. Even after they had started on that long second leg, where he had trusted to do so much, luck was against him. The northeast wind was as fierce as ever, and still the "Conqueror" gained. Dave would not look at her. He stared fiercely at the great curving sails above him, swollen and stiff with wind, the mast creaking and straining as the little vessel staggered bravely on under her heavy load. Dave's nails were white with the grip of his hands on the wheel.

And the "Conqueror's" tiller never wavered in Thorne's hard grasp. His eye on the luff of the sail, his breath coming short and hard, every thought hurled forward with his flying boat, he was making up for the failure of last year—he would win this time beyond doubt or disbelief. Already the tide in the "pudding stones" was shouting victory in his ears. He laughed to it, and a voice came crying back. Thorne looked around. He wondered if any of the other boys had heard it.

The wind had veered into the east and was piling up the waves so that the "crew" who lay for ballast along the starboard rail caught a glimpse now and then of the "Fleetwing" staggering on behind. They saw and heard nothing else.

Again that faint call came to Thorne like the voice in the ripple of water. He bent and looked under the boom. Something was dancing toward the fatal current round the "pudding stones." Dancing like a thoughtless child. A wave lifted it nearer. It was a skiff and a bit of white stuff fluttered from the bow. Well, many boats came out to sea, why should Thorne notice this. Yes, many boats came—but not so far—not skiffs—not with something white flying from the prow in terrified signal of distress—surely not with frightened cries for help—for "mamma" and "papa." But why should Thorne stop to help. Dave was close behind him, so close that if he changed his course now enough to rescue the little skiff, he would be too late by the time he had come back and rounded the "pudding stone" buoy on the starboard side, Dave would have passed him.

A wave tossed the little craft on its crest—another, and another, each wave nearer to the whirl of water over the rocks. Thorne could see the spindle on the crag standing like a warning finger. It was time to tack out around it and start on the last leg home. Again came that frightened, sobbing cry, so hopeless and so lost. Thorne looked at his crew.

"I say, Thorne, the 'Fleetwing' seems to be gaining," called little Harley. "We can't be losing now, eh?"

Thorne's hand trembled on the wheel. The rudder swayed. Slowly the shadow of the sail swung round over its captain. With a cry of amazement the boys flung themselves into the lockpit. "What on earth, Thorne; there's the buoy on the port hand——"

Thorne nodded to the drifting boat, already circling in the edge of the whirlpool.

"Get the boat hook, Harley, quick. Ease her off, Bob; there she comes, now then, that's it. There's no hurry, Harley, we can't win. Thank God, we saw them in time."

"Never mind, then, they'll find out who's won," he added, quietly, as a long faint shout from the baffled "Fleetwing" warned them that their course was seen.

For as Joe eased the sheets to go about he saw the "Conqueror" headed home, but with the pudding stone spindle on the wrong side, and he said in a puzzled way: "Do look at Thorne, will you; isn't he inside the mark?"

"By Jove, so he is," shouted Joe angrily. "Call him, boys, let him know we've seen him cheating."

"Never mind, never mind," cried Dave, "wait until we get home, the cheat. We'll settle with him then." Dave's heart swelled as he saw the hated black hull, its huge canvas taut, ripping through the rough sea as though it cared not a stroke for honor. "Coward!" groaned Dave.

What a long hour that was. "But the race is mine," said Dave, "Mine, mine, mine!" He repeated it over and over, as he heard the far-off clamor of whistles and bells and horns when the "Conqueror" crossed the line.

The angry blood flooded his cheeks and shook his voice as he touched the pier. For even his father and mother were there holding Thorne's hands and laughing ecstatically. And his two little sisters all wet and tumbled laughing in his mother's arms. Dave could hardly wait to touch the dock, but sprang ashore. "Father, mother, do you know what he did——"

"Oh, Dave, did you see it, too; how can we ever thank him. If it had not been for him, if he had not been there just at that moment, Dick says that he and Mary would have been drowned. Oh, I can't think of it; such a narrow escape. And Mr. Thorne lost the race, too. It was too late to go back then."

As Dave understood he held out his hand. "You've won the cup," he said, swiftly. "Thorne, I'm mighty glad, old fellow."

"Not I," laughed Thorne; "it's yours, of course."

So that is why there are two names on the sloop cup, instead of one, and why it stands on the mantel in the club house; it's proudest trophy.—New York Ledger.

FIGHT WITH A FISH.

Monster Tuna Landed After a Contest Lasting Four Hours.

Prof. Charles F. Holder, the naturalist and author, describes how he caught what he believes to be the largest tuna ever taken with rod and reel. It was early morning, outside of Avalon Bay, Catalina Island, when he got a strike which threw the heavy flying fish bait which he was trolling far up the line. "Then," says the professor, "the magnificent fish came boiling along the surface, throwing the foam high in the air, in a manner that has given some anglers here the 'buck fever.' Fortunately I hooked the fish, and its first rush took about 400 feet of line screaming and hissing from the reel, and had not the heavy brake been soaked the line would have burnt off at once. I succeeded in turning the fish, which then came in on me, with the greatest velocity.

"I had managed to reel in the slack, and when the fish reached within twenty feet of the boat it turned and was away again, taking 500 feet of the thread of a line. Again I turned it, and again it came in at me. Turning once more, the fish dashed away, towing the heavy boat a mile out to sea at a rapid rate. Finally I turned it, and, after a superb play on the surface, circling the boat, it turned and towed us a mile inshore, so near the rocks that I thought we should lose it in the kelp.

"Here the fish fought me for nearly three hours, rushing in and out, plunging down into the blue channel, circling around, darting away, and then coming at me from unexpected points, showing the most remarkable cunning I have ever observed in many years' experience in rod and reel fishing.

"At 9:30, after I had played the tuna three hours, I turned it after one of its rushes, when it gathered its energies and headed for Avalon, making a single run of six miles, and at just 10:30 a. m. I stopped it in front of the Hotel Metropole, where it gave a wonderful exhibition while surrounded by the launches of several friends who came out to see the finish. The tuna was, so far as I could judge, stronger than ever, yet it had towed the boat against the oars of my boatman at least eight miles.

"A heavy sea had picked up and threatened the boat, but this was forgotten, and at the supreme moment my boatman slipped the gaff under the fish and it was ours (?)—not yet—the gaff went to pieces and the fish got away 100 feet again. I reeled it in; this time a big gaff was hooked into it, and, with a cheer, the monster fish was slid into the boat, almost capsizing it.

"The tuna weighed 183 pounds. Its length was six feet two inches, girth four feet, and the catch gives to California the hardest fighting game fish in the world with rod and reel."

Six Senses.

One of the greatest discoveries of physiology is that we once had six senses. What the lost sense was no one knows, and probably no one will ever know. But that our forefathers possessed it there is no doubt, for the remains of that part of the brain in which it resided are still to be seen in any one of us.

These remains are simply a small and now perfectly useless little mass of brain substance, called the "pituitary body." It consists of two tiny little oval lobes joined together, and lying in a little cavity of the skull, strangely named the sella turcica, and situated over and behind the nose.

It is quite possible that it may have enabled our forefathers to see in the dark before lamps and candles were invented, or it may have placed them in communion with ghosts and fairies, or it may have been an organ that enabled them to go home in a bee line when they lost their way in the primeval forests.

On the other hand, it is possible that it was a bad substitute for vision or smell or hearing, and died out when the improved sense organ developed.

The Dog Began the Trouble.

Ole Hanson had trouble with a bellcose dog belonging to his neighbor—a Russian by the name of Havva Drenkovitskey. The Swede shot the dog as soon as he discovered that he was not friendly to him, and the sequel found him in a justice's court.

When Ole was propounded interrogatories by the attorney for the prosecution, he evidenced a sense of justice in framing replies that is rarely witnessed. "What sort of a gun did you have, Mr. Hanson?" inquired the attorney. "Es var two-hole shotgun." "Don't you think you could have scared him away?" "Aye might ef aye had not bane scare so lak deckens maesal." "Why didn't you take the other end of the gun and scare him away?" "Val, master lawyer, vy dedn' de dog com for mae oder end firyt ef hae vant to hav mae do det vay vid him vid de gun?"

Some Egg Statistics.

Secretary Wilson, of the National Department of Agriculture, estimates that the annual egg product of the United States amounts to 850,000,000 dozen. Placed end to end, they would girt the earth twelve times at the equator and still leave enough to exercise a proper restraint upon one-night barnstormers.

It Was Only a Cameo.

"What a beautiful pin, Mrs. Stripes. Is it an heirloom?"

"Oh, no; it's just a cameo."

THEY WANT TO TELL

These Grateful Women Who Have Been Helped by Mrs. Pinkham.

Women who have suffered severely and been relieved of their ills by Mrs. Pinkham's advice and medicine are constantly urging publication of their statements for the benefit of other women. Here are two such letters:

Mrs. LIZZIE BEVERLY, 258 Merrimac St., Lowell, Mass., writes:

"It affords me great pleasure to tell all suffering women of the benefit I have received from taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I can hardly find words to express my gratitude for what she has done for me. My trouble was ulceration of the womb. I was under the doctor's care. Upon examination he found fifteen very large ulcers, but he failed to do me good. I took several bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, also used the Sanative Wash, and am cured. Mrs. Pinkham's medicine saved my life, and I would recommend it to all suffering women."

Mrs. AMOS TROMBLEAY, Ellenburgh Ctr., N. Y., writes:

"I took cold at the time my baby was born, causing me to have milk legs, and was sick in bed for eight weeks. Doctors did me no good. I surely thought I would die. I was also troubled with falling of the womb. I could not eat, had faint spells as often as ten times a day. One day a lady came to see me and told me of the benefit she had derived from taking Lydia E. Pinkham's medicine, and advised me to try it. I did so, and had taken only half a bottle before I was able to sit in a chair. After taking three bottles I could do my own work. I am now in perfect health."

Incorrigible.

A poor little street Arab was brought into a hospital by the police. He had been run over by an omnibus and was badly injured. The chaplain was sent for, as it was thought improbable that the boy would live many hours. With little tact the chaplain began the interview thus: "My boy, the doctors think you are very much hurt. Have you been a good little boy?"

Boy (much bored)—You git aout!

Chaplain (shocked)—But I am afraid you are not a good little boy, and you know you may perhaps be going to die.

Boy (anxious to end the interview)—Well, tain't none o' your business anyow. Wot's me death got to do with you? 'Ave you got a pal in the coffin line?

It is pleasant to be able to relate that the boy finally recovered

Now and then the doctor is believed to be almost omniscient. A patient in a military hospital was constantly getting into hot water because he smuggled food into the wards. One morning his medical officer was about to examine his throat with a laryngoscope. Seeing the little mirror all ready for use the man's chum whispered an anxious warning from the adjoining bed. "I say, Bill, you'd best 'ave a care. 'Ee moight 'appen to see wot yer 'ad for supper lawst noight."—Cornhill Magazine.

Could Sleep at Will.

A friend of the late Dr. William Pepper of Philadelphia tells how he could go to sleep at will. "Will you excuse me, Mrs. ——?" he would say sometimes. "I could talk with you much more satisfactorily if I had a few minutes' nap. Jane, make Mrs. —— comfortable and wake me in ten minutes."

Outside the office would be crowded with people waiting to see him—about the Philadelphia museums, the University of Pennsylvania, the public libraries, or about their health, but he would go into his own room behind the office, would stretch out on the lounge, throw a rug over his knees and closing his eyes would be asleep at once. Ten minutes later he would be roused by his servant and would at once resume his conversation with the patient at the point at which it had been dropped. He would sleep in his carriage as he was driven from one appointment to another. He would sleep in a train, in a strange parlor or library, in private or in public, absolutely indifferent to comment.

School Holidays In France.

Two hundred and six holidays in the year, as against 159 school days! That's the record of public instruction in France. To begin with, there is the regular midsummer holiday, which covers a period of 64 days. That's pretty good for a starter. Then there are the Sundays. They are holidays of course everywhere, but they count an additional 52 days. Then ten days are allowed for the proper celebration of Christmas and New Year's. To be thoroughly observant of the great feast of Eastertide 15 days are given. Thursdays are holidays, and that means 52 more days of no labor. All Saints' comes in for three days' holiday, St. Charlemagne two days, Shrove Tuesday and Ash Wednesday two days, Whitsuntide three days, and three days to make merry when the national fete in July rolls round. The rest of the year the children are supposed to study.—Philadelphia Ledger.

World's Largest Workhouse.

The largest workhouse in the world is at Liverpool, where the workhouse has accommodation for no fewer than 5,000 inmates. It is not, however, often filled, as only half of its many dormitories are occupied by the permanent pauper residents. There are occasions, such as a labor strike, if long continued, which cause it to fill up rapidly, and then it proves none too big for the requirements of the union. Liverpool has a large number of poor, but it is specially munificent in its charities. Of these the chief are the Bluecoat hospital, maintaining and educating 350 children; the Orphan asylum, the Seamen's Orphan asylum in Newsham park, containing about 400 boys and an equal number of girls; schools for the blind and the deaf and dumb, industrial schools, and a number of hospitals.—London Tit-Bits.

Stranger Than Fiction.

The limits of probability have lately been puzzling a London police magistrate. The origin of his perplexity, as given by the Illustrated London News, is this:

A young domestic servant tried to cash one or two forged checks and was arrested in the attempt. She said "a gentleman" gave them to her—a "Mr. Gilbert," whose whereabouts nobody could trace. That story has been told too often to impress a jury—no juryman likes to be made a laughing stock—but before a verdict of "guilty" could be given a man fell down dead in the streets. He was recognized as "the gentleman" by the accused woman, and, sure enough, in his pocket were found other forged checks similar to those she had attempted to put into circulation. Even Mr. Lane, Q. C., may be persuaded that truth really is stranger than fiction.

Benefit of Peerage.

Every one may not know what the term "benefit of peerage" implies. A peer can demand a private audience of the sovereign to represent his views on matters of public welfare. For treason or felony he can demand to be tried by his peers. He cannot be outlawed in any civil action, nor can he be arrested unless for an indictable offense, and he is exempt from serving on juries. He may sit with his hat on in courts of justice, and should he be liable to the last penalty of the law he can demand a silken cord instead of a hempen rope.

Tobacco was discovered in Santo Domingo in 1496, in Yucatan by the Spaniards in 1520. It was introduced into France in 1560, and into England in 1583.

Delay Makes It Harder.

Mis-steps have made the worst sprains, but it is no mis-step to use St. Jacobs Oil. It makes a cure by strengthening, soothing and conquering the pain. Every hour's delay makes it harder to cure.

COURAGE.

Because I hold it sinful to despond,
And will not let the bitterness of life
Blind me with burning tears, but look beyond
Its tumult and strife;

Because I lift my head above the mist,
Where the sun shines and the broad breezes blow,
By every ray and every raindrop kissed
That God's love doth bestow;

Think you I find no bitterness at all;
No burden to be borne, like Christian's pack?
Think you there are no ready tears to fall,
Because I keep them back?

Why should I hug life's ills with cold reserve,
To curse myself and all who love me? Nay!
A thousand times more good than I deserve
God gives me every day.

And in each one of these rebellious tears
Kept bravely back he makes a rainbow shine;
Grateful I take his slightest gift; no fears
Nor any doubts are mine.

Dark skies must clear, and when the clouds are past,
One golden day redeems a weary year;
Patient I listen, sure that sweet at last
Will sound His voice of cheer.

IN THE ELEVATOR.

CAMPERTON stopped at the hotel desk long enough to read the letter which was handed to him with his key; then he started for his rooms to dress for his club dinner.

But the club dinner was no longer in his mind. The contents of that letter engrossed his thoughts to the exclusion of everything else.

It was from his late traveling companion, Birch, whom he had left in Paris a month ago, and who now wrote from London to tell him that the Kingsleys had quit the continent and were intending to sail for America at once.

"So the coast is clear, old man, and you can come back," declared the writer, persuasively. "You were an idiot ever to run away as you did. Join me here in a fortnight and we'll be in time for that Mediterranean trip."

Camperton's jaws were set and his brows contracted as he stepped into the elevator.

He knew that the Kingsleys, in returning to America at this time, were curtailing their original European program by at least six months. And it was easy to guess the reason.

They were coming home to prepare for their daughter's marriage to her titled suitor. The Count himself, no doubt, would follow in a short time to claim his bride.

"And I must get away before they arrive," decided the young man. "I'll go back to Europe by the next steamer."

Through the mist of his mental abstraction he observed that the elevator had an occupant besides himself—a woman who had seated herself in a shadowy corner of the car; but her presence did not change the current of his thoughts.

The elevator came to a sudden stop—so sudden, indeed, that Camperton, not being prepared to check his upward course all at once, involuntarily rose to his tiptoes, waving his arms like a huge bird about to take flight, and then pirouetted gracefully toward the other passenger in the corner.

"There is no danger, madame," he began, in his most reassuring tones. "We're fast between two floors and must wait a while——"

He stopped short as he noted, with surprise and alarm, the attitude of the lady. She was still sitting in her corner and was holding a handkerchief over her face, while little convulsive quivers and shrugs of the shoulders indicated that she was weeping.

In his contrition and his desire to soothe her harrowed feelings he was about to sit down beside her, when a sound that was strangely like a giggle came from behind the handkerchief.

Camperton started up, flushing hotly.

"Do forgive me!" And the laughing voice suddenly became coaxing. "I know it is rude of me to laugh, but O, Mr. Camperton, you can't imagine how funny you looked just now, when you went hopping and waltzing about and kneeling at my feet—for all the world like a performing bear!"

Camperton did not hear. He was staring at her in blank amazement. He made several attempts to speak before the words would come.

"Miss Kingsley," he managed to articulate at last. His heart had almost stopped at the moment of recognition, but it was now beating furiously. "I suppose this is your astral body. It cannot be your real self."

"O, but it is!" said the girl with animation. "We came over in the Campania, which arrived this morning, and we are stopping at this hotel until our house is put in order."

"We?"

"Of course; papa and I. You don't suppose I would come alone?"

"I—I didn't know. I was not exactly expecting you to come at all. Your plans, as I understand them, would have kept you abroad the rest of the year."

Miss Kingsley dropped her eyes.

"It is always easy to change one's plans, you know," she said, betraying a slight confusion. "You did not honor me with an explanation of why you left Europe."

"But the note!" he exclaimed.

"The note, Mr. Camperton?"

"And my letter? Do you mean that you did not read my letter through—the one I sent to you at Hotel Continental two days before my departure?"

"I received no letter from you."

"But, Miss Kingsley, you—you answered it. You told me not to mention the subject again, and you are annoyed because I have insisted on reminding you of that letter. But I only want to explain why I wrote it. All Paris was connecting your name with that of the Count, and there were persistent rumors that you were to become his wife. It was common talk that your father had set his heart on the match, and nobody seemed to question your willingness to become a countess. The rumors and the gossip had a most depressing effect upon me. I think you know, Miss Kingsley, what my own hopes were. I had loved you for a year, although I had made no confession. I could not believed that you cared for the Count, or that you would sacrifice yourself for a title, even to please your father. But the anxiety and suspense became so intolerable that I resolved to end the uncertainty and learn my own fate. Owing to your father's espionage I was unable to find an opportunity to speak with you alone. So I wrote that letter, confessing my love, begging the right to put an end to the rumors concerning you and the Count, telling you how anxiously I should wait for an answer, and assuring you that if my offer were rejected I would leave Paris and Europe and never annoy you again."

"I never received the letter," she said, softly, without looking up.

"Never received it! Then how do you explain the answer?" he demanded.

"I wrote that note—yes; but not in answer to any communication from you. It was not intended for you. I do not know how it came into your possession. You will see that the upper part of the sheet has been carefully cut off. On the detached part was the name of the person to whom it was addressed."

She raised her eyes, and he saw that there were tears in them, but before he could speak she asked: "Did you send your letter to me by post or by messenger?"

"Why, I sent it by Tomasso, the little Italian, whom I often employed in that way."

"And he brought you the answer?"

"Certainly."

"Ah! I think I understand it now," she said, her expression showing the light of a sudden conviction. "Tomasso, as we afterward learned, was in the pay of this Count, who employed him to spy on the movements of people whom he desired to keep under surveillance. It was he, I am now sure, who intercepted your letter and sent back to you this note. His object was to get you out of the way. The note was originally addressed to him—in reply to his third proposal of marriage—and he cut off his own name and sent it to you."

Camperton listened like one in a trance. Then he cried out sharply:

"Do you mean to say you are not engaged to the Count?"

"Engaged! Why, I hate him! He is a wicked, designing man. Papa himself is convinced of that now. It was on his account—to get rid of his persistent attentions—that I prevailed upon papa to take me home before we had finished our travels. O, Jack—Mr. Camperton! how could you believe such a thing of me?"

Ten minutes later, when they were released from their imprisonment in the elevator, they parted with the understanding that they were to meet in the Kingsleys' parlor within an hour. And there was a vacant seat at the club dinner that night.—Woman's Home Companion.

Antidote for a Soldier.

They were at the first matinee after the return from the summer in different places. They were exchanging confidences.

"What sort of a looking man is he?" asked one.

"Oh, tall and thin, handsome, smooth face."

"Is he a swell?"

"Indeed, he is. He wears evening dress every night, whether he's going to a party or not."

"Does he say 'bean' or 'bin?'"

"Always says 'bean,' and carries his handkerchief in his sleeve."

"How about his 'a's?'"

"Why, he uses broad ones, and I heard that he took a cold bath every morning, whether the weather was hot or freezing."

"Really, and you know him well? You lucky girl! He must be a regular swell."

"And he wears his trousers turned up whatever the weather is."

"You lucky girl! Can't you bring him around to call on Sunday? I'd like Clara to see him. She's so stuck up about that soldier of hers who never got any nearer the fighting than Tampa."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

What Alaska Owes to Candle-Fish.

When the Alaskan is snowed in, and is without a light, he inserts the tail of a candle-fish into a crack in the table and touches a match to its nose. It gives a clear three-candle-power light. The backbone is largely formed of phosphorus, which fully accounts for the strength of the flame and the heat developed. The substitute for codliver oil retards rapid burning, as tallow acts in an ordinary candle.

The fish is valuable as food. It may also be used as a substitute for codliver oil, which, aiding the natural heat of the body, serves as a protection from the severe cold. It is to be hoped that scientists will discover a way by which the skin of this fish may be made into clothing and its backbone sharpened into miners' picks.

Sunday is the day when a man spends the morning in dodging his wife's sweeping and dusting, and the afternoon in wishing he hadn't eaten so much.

A man may know love by heart and yet be unable to define it.

WHAT MAKES THE TROLLEY GO

"Whoa!"

The trolley car turned the curve with a jerk that made the passengers who were standing bump against those who were sitting and totally unbalanced several on the back platform. Then it stopped to let on a weazened up, scientific looking old man. It started with another jerk. There was a flash, smoke rolled out from under the car, and the smell of brimstone came to the nostrils of the passengers.

"Burned out," was the exclamation of the conductor as he returned from an interview with the motorman, both of them inspecting the works of the under portion of the car.

"Say," said one of those on the platform, "I wish some one would tell me how a car like this is arranged. What is it that makes it go, anyway?"

The little old gentleman straightened himself up, his face wore a smile and he coughed as he began, while those around him were all attention: "Ahem."

"Men and their sciences have put the yoke upon the forces of nature, but they have as yet in no way lessened or explained their mysteries. Electricity, with its wonder-working power, is a strange, inexplicable a thing to-day as on the day of its recognition by the mind of man. What is it? No one knows, not even Tesla or Edison or any other of the great minds who have harnessed it and determined its laws. One thing is certain about it, and that is that electricity is a form of energy. It can do work and most tremendous work at that. With the instrumentality of slender wires, and a few mechanical contrivances, it is able to drive street cars along at terrific speed, notwithstanding the fact that the car may be weighted down with human freight. The engines which produce it may at the same time be miles away. It is almost witchcraft. It is as if man waved his wand and caused things to obey his will. And yet these phenomena have become so usual that they have ceased to be objects of surprise or wonder. Men see them a hundred times a day and more, and perhaps never once ask themselves what they all mean."

After delivering himself of this ponderous prologue, the old gentleman went on:

"In order to better understand the arrangement by which a street car is made to go, there are a few fundamental principles in the laws of electricity which should be first stated. Current electricity is produced in two ways, by batteries, or by mechanical means, such as the dynamo. The latter device is, in its simplest form, a coil of wire which is made to revolve rapidly between the two poles of a magnet, bent into the shape of a horseshoe. In the space between the two ends of such a magnet is what is known as the field of force. It is a region which is filled with lines of force, or lines of stress, running from one of the magnet ends across to the other. These lines are loops which are completed in the iron of the magnet itself. It is a well-known fact that when a coil of wire forming a complete or closed circuit is revolved in this field, part of the energy which is required to do this work is turned into the form of an electrical current in the coil. Given a cylinder covered with coils, an arrangement called an armature, revolving in the field, each of them will have for a short time of each revolution, a current. These currents are made to flow into one continuous current by means of a pair of metallic brushes which bear on the revolving end of the coils, the brushes forming the beginning and end of a complete circuit of wire. If somewhere in that circuit there is another machine like the dynamo, into which the current is made to flow, the coils between its magnets are forced around by the magnet lines, and the energy of the current is thus converted back into the energy of mechanical motion. The latter machine is known as a motor.

"If anywhere in a circuit, there is a break, that is, a space through which there is no connection of a conducting material, the current will cease to flow, but the instant that all of these breaks are bridged over by materials which are conductors of electricity, there is again a continuous flow of electricity. Different materials differ in their power to conduct electricity. Copper is a good conductor; iron is not so good as copper; glass is a non-conductor, or insulator. In any given material, the size of the conductor affects the rate of flow. A small wire will not allow so much electricity to flow as a larger wire of the same material. This power of opposing the flow of a current is called resistance."

"But where does the current come from and where does it go?" asked one of the listeners.

"The current which furnishes the energy for the working of the street cars, is produced at the power house of the company, where the dynamos for this work are situated. One end of the dynamo is connected with the trolley wire; the other end is attached to the rails. These two are not connected when there are no cars on the line, so that there is not then a complete circuit. There is therefore no current flowing either along the trolley wire or in the rails. But let the trolley wire be connected in any way with the rails, the circuit is complete, and the current will at once begin to flow. A trolley car furnishes such a connection, and the flow is through the trolley wire, down through the car and its mechanical devices, and back through the rails to the dynamo."

The old man took his audience along the outside of the car and pointed at the various parts as he resumed.

"To look at the exterior of a car no one would realize what complication there is in the arrangement of the wiring. People have various ideas of where the current goes and what it does. One well informed gentleman was heard not long ago to wonder if the electricity was produced in "that little box up there in front," meaning the box at which the motorman turns the current on and off. The trolley pole is, of course, the connecting link between the wire and the mechanism of the car. Leading from the base of the pole is a wire which conducts the current to a cut off switch at the end of the car. This is in case the motorman is called out of his car for several minutes, for by it the current can be entirely cut off from the car, that is, the circuit through its mechanism is broken. When this is closed, however, as it always is when the car is in readiness to start, the current flows next to a lightning arrester. This is a device by which, when the powerful energy produced by a lightning flash flows into the car, a fuse wire is burned out leading to the motors and the flash is led directly to the ground. From the lightning arrester, the current goes to the starting box at the front of the car. And here the complication begins. There are six points indicated on the top of the starting box, each corresponding to a certain amount of the current which is allowed to flow through the motors. The interior of the box is a strange looking arrangement. It looks like a number of small iron wheels laid end on end, all of which turn as the starting handle is turned. Beneath the rims of each of these wheels is a contact point. These points are differently situated around the perimeter, so that first one, then the next, then the next, shall come into contact and take the current. Each of the positions of the starting handle, and therefore of the row of wheels underneath, brings into play a different wire leading down to resistance boxes near the motors. The resistance boxes consist of long coils of sheet iron. The first position, in which the car is just starting, puts in the greatest amount of resistance, and the least current therefore flows to the motors. The next position of the starter makes the contact with a wire which cuts out some of the resistance, and there is then a stronger current flowing to the motors. The other positions of the starter correspond with decreasing amounts of resistance and so stronger currents, until the car is going at full speed. Passing through the resistance coils, the current goes to the motors and thence through the wheels to the rails.

"In the starting box there is, too, a reversing arrangement, which, however, can only be used after the current is turned off altogether. This consists of a series of wires which lead the current through the motors in the opposite direction from that taken by the direct current. Given the motion of the motors, it is only necessary to have the axle of the car geared to them and there results the forward or reversed motion of the car itself."

"Where do they fix a car like this?" was asked.

"Judging from the quiet outward appearance of the shops out Jefferson avenue one would scarcely realize that there is going on within the continuous business of repairing all the cars of the city, no little matter. Upwards of one hundred men are employed here the year round, working like beavers, mending, making new, replacing, painting some of the parts of disabled street cars. On an average from six to nine cars are brought in daily, with disabled motors. The burning out of a motor is a serious accident, as the wiring must often be done entirely over again, an immense amount of labor, entailing an expense of at least $50. The winding of the motors with wire is an interesting occupation and requires considerable skill. Each loop of wire consists of four turns, which are bound around with insulating paper and protected on the corners with isinglass. These are then bound around with insulating taps and each bundle of wire is put in its proper place in the frame of the motor. The burning out of a motor is often due to the too rapid starting of the car, as the full current then rushes through the motor, often jumps over the slight insulation, and begins fusing the wires and even the core or middle part of the motor.

"The magnets at each side of the motor must also be wound with wire, as the current flowing around them supplies the strength of the magnets and also the lines which make up the field of force. Then there are carpentry, machine work, forging, lathe work, and many other processes going on in the shope. Great cars are lifted up bodily by innocent looking machines, and the trucks taken out from under them so that the motors can be removed. Wheels which have become flattened, a thing indicated by the bumping of the car as it goes along, are ground down on grindstones. As a general thing, every car is brought into the shops once in three months for a thorough overhauling and cleaning of the mechanism."

By this time another car had come up and began pushing the disabled one along. The little old gentleman went in and took his seat.—Detroit Free Press.

MAKING PARTS OF TROLLEY MACHINERY.

"Tipping" Legalized.

Every traveler considers tipping a nuisance, but now that it has been indorsed by a higher court of Vienna, Austria, it is hard to tell where it will end. A tourist, having stopped four weeks at a certain hotel, gave the head porter six florins as a gratuity; he claimed ten, and locked up the gentleman's luggage until it should be "paid." The matter was taken into the courts, and it was developed that the porter received no wages from the hotel in fact which the tourist was supposed to know), and that he therefore had to depend on the generosity of guests. The generosity which the gentleman owed the servant was then gravely computed at a certain number of kreutzers per day, and it was decided that the traveler must pay not only ten, but twelve florins, before he could get his luggage away from the resolute porter. As this precedent will no doubt be followed by other tourists and other porters, tourists have a new problem to consider. The question will now exist not only how much a man must pay for his board, room, candles, shaving water, fire-building, etc., but also how much generosity he must pay, in order to assist the landlord in meeting the salaries of his assistants.

Rations of Sugar.

Sugar will soon form part of the regular rations of the German soldier. Experiments, in which some were subjected to the sugar diet, and others received the ordinary rations, showed that the weight of the sugar men increased during the maneuvers more than that of the men on the ordinary ration. It was proved that during long marches the feelings of hunger could be kept down for a longer time by the use of sugar, that the sugar people suffered less from thirst than the others, and that a few pieces of sugar sufficed to still thirst for a considerable time. It was also observed that symptoms of exhaustion or of sunstroke were quickly overcome by a small ration of sugar.

THE COUNTRY WOMAN'S LIFE.

"IF we want the lives of our girls and women on the farms to mean more, their lives must, first of all, be made easier," writes Edward Bok, of "The Girl Who Feels Isolated," in the Ladies' Home Journal. "There is too much menial work being done on our farms by wives and daughters which ought to be done by hired help. If the women on our farms could form among themselves 'leisure guilds,' and devise ways and means to have some of their work done for them, and not do it all themselves, the initial step would be taken toward the emancipation and a freedom from isolation of thousands of women. See, for example, what can be done in a town for the improvement of everybody in it, and start, if you will, with a public library. There is a public gallery of prints of the best paintings; of good photographs—a gallery made as the nucleus for an amateur photograph club, with summer jaunts and an exhibition in the winter. There is a collection to be made for such a gallery of specimens of all the rocks, and plants, and flowers, and insects of the place—the finest material for pleasant winter evening studies and classes in natural history. There is the organization of a band for music in the summer evenings on the green, with refreshments served by girls to raise money for some other object; a concert or lecture in the fall, perhaps. There are reading classes and dramatic clubs to be formed for the winter. There is a woman's club for the study of current events and books; a farmer's club for the men for the discussion of agricultural science and economics; a sewing club for the girls; a manual-training club for the boys; a debating society for the boys; a branch of the Chautauqua circle; a King's Daughters' circle for some specific neighborhood need or purpose; an art exhibition of the pictures from the magazines; a singing school for a concert during the winter; a neighborhood guild for girls; a guild for men and women for the betterment of good roads and the planting of hedges by the side of them; a dinner club for young men, where each member gives one dinner to the club during the season at his house."

The Well-Dressed Woman.

Mary Katharine Howard gives serious consideration to the art of looking one's best in an article showing what is good taste in dressing, in the Woman's Home Companion.

"The well-dressed woman is not only well gowned, but all the small details of her toilet are given consideration. Her hair, skin and nails show evidences of care and painstaking, and her clothing has not only been well made but is well kept. Always try to look your best, and that the game is well worth the candle will show in the influence upon your home, husband and children. The well-dressed woman is not the one who dresses the most extravagantly, or employs the most fashionable dressmaker; nor is she the one who affects all ultra styles and fads in dress; but it is she who is always consistently dressed with regard to time, place, occasion, age and the size of her husband's or father's income. We all owe a duty to our families, ourselves and society at large to make the best of ourselves in every way, and to be always well dressed is one of the ways of doing it."

Tight Waists Again.

French dressmakers have decreed that the bouffante and rather careless-looking blouse should be converted into a tight-fitting, long-waisted corsage, which is made without darts, it is true, but is molded carefully to the figure, the gathers in front being neat and shapely, instead of hanging in the pouch-shaped bag as formerly.

They say this desirable reformation has been brought about by a celebrated corsetmaker in Paris, who incases the most fashionable society women and actresses in that capital, and who waxed so eloquent on the subject that she gained her end, and persuaded her clientele that the tight-fitting bodice should regain its prestige in the near future.

Nemesis of Ill-Advised Marriage.

Disastrous enough is the Nemesis which follows on a boy's imprudent marriage with one who is, perhaps, so far his social inferior as to be inadmissible to his natural associates—one whose past renders her unpresentable to his mother and sisters—one, his astute senior, who palmed off her faded charms on him as fresh and lovely products of a fitting age, and only when securely married revealed herself in her distasteful truth—one who schemed and angled, and baited her hook with all the skill taught by long experience, but as yet unsuccessful in its object—the landing of the big gudgeon. He, the foolish boy who thinks he knows better than his elders, and whose science of life goes far beyond the wisdom of the ages, rises to that well-baited hook, and Nemesis pulls him to the bank, gaffs, lands and cooks him for the remainder of his poor, uselessly regretful life! So with the girl who listens to her heart—heaven save the mark!—and marries her plausible scoundrel, let her calm judging mother say what she will. There is a Nemesis in store for her, too, as for us all; and notwithstanding those feet of wool she will creep up to the poor, foolish sinner before the mools are laid on the tired eyes, which then will weep no more.—Exchange.

Be Not Too Familiar.

We Americans are in too much of a hurry to be of much use to each other's hearts. It is the educational fad of our day to develop the individuality of every child to a tiresome degree until his individuality becomes a general impertinent nuisance. A reasonable amount of old-fashioned "what Paddy gave the drum" would create better men. Mothers join classes for instruction in the developing methods and meantime lose sight of the power they are losing over their sons by allowing them excessive freedom of speech and a hail-fellow-well-met familiarity which throws the parent off of her pedestal. A mother belongs on a pedestal of purity, veneration and superiority. If a man is to consider her advice or suggestions worth anything to him he must be intimate and confidential with his mother, but not too familiar with her.—Frances Evans, in Ladies' Home Journal.

The Woman Man Loves.

No man wishes to have as the presiding genius of his household a woman with whom self is the supreme ruler of life and actions. He wants to come home to the loving ministrations of a pair of unselfish hands that will have his slippers warmed and a cozy chair waiting in readiness for him, while her ears are ever ready to listen to the confidences of the day, and her lips though sealed as to her own domestic worries, will utter loving, sympathizing words to smooth away all the jarring elements of business.

Such is what every man expects to find in "the one woman," and the girl who would fit herself for the position of wife and mother must escape from the hurry and excitement of the age and by taking things quietly conquer and subjugate self.

A Household Disgrace.

There is no justification for the feast and famine principle or the "blue Monday" idea in the home. They are ever an arraignment against the intelligence and womanliness of the mistress, mother and homemaker. It is the boast of some wives that their husbands accept uncomplainingly whatever is put before them, be its quality what it may. Alas, that any woman should make a boast so self-accusing! And, alas, that any good but mistaken man should become a party to selfish neglectfulness and indolence by his complaisance!—Woman's Home Companion.

Care of the Eyelashes.

The ancients made an art of the cultivation of the eyelashes. It was recognized that, besides adding to the expression of the eyes, the lashes preserved them from the dust, cold, wind and too glaring light, all of which tend to irritate and often inflame the eye. It is therefore not a vanity to endeavor to obtain them and then preserve them from falling out.

A little pure vaseline applied to the eye-lashes every night will aid their growth and strengthen them.

Taller and More Handsome.

American girls, according to Dean Smith, of Barnard College, are growing taller with startling rapidity. Bryn Mawr has kept statistics for twenty years, and the figures indicate an increase in the height of students of two or three inches. The average height of the girl of '85 was 5 feet 3 inches, and of '88, 5 feet 4 inches. It is now 5 feet 6 inches. The students of Vassar are reported to be taller than in any previous year.

ISSUED EVERY FRIDAY.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.,

FRIDAY, JANUARY 20.....1899

So far as human prescience can decide the backbone of the prolonged drought has been broken., and the people may with reason expect a year of good crops. The danger point has not yet been entirely past it is true, but everything suggests plenty of moisture during the remainder of the season. Yesterday's storm was the one thing needed to set the self accumulating ball of prosperity rolling in southern California. The people have withstood admirably the long season of business depression and their experience had prepared them for the added adversities of a dry season; so that while business in some channels has been comparatively dull for a year past, the various communities in southern California are in good shape to take advantage of the flattering promises of a good crop year. Seeding will now go ahead on the usual large scale, enterprises that have heretofore been kept back on account of the drought will be proceeded with; people will be willing to spend money that they had been carefully saving against another dry season; business will be better in every way.—Express.

Governor Gage suggests that the Legislature meet once in four years, which smells of chimney,corner politics. Californians have fallen into the habit of abusing the Legislature as soon as it is elected; in fact, of taking it for granted even before election that it is going to be dishonest. The Sun is often quite severe on some of the doings of the Legislature, but it believes in giving men we elect to office a chance to do something, and believes that we should abuse them only after they have failed to perform the duties expected of them. There is not enough time to get through with the business coming before the Legislature even meeting once in two years, and it could hardly make a start in sixty days, if it met once in four years. The Sun has always maintained that we do not give our Legislators a chance, and hence that we have no right to blame them for sins of omission and it excuses largely some of the sins of commission. There should be economy in all branches of the public service, but we certainly begin at the wrong end when we cut short the time of the Legislature. There should be a salary and an unlimited session. We do not regard the Governor's suggestion, therefore, as at all complimentary to his political knowledge.—Colusa Sun.

The national House of Representatives has reversed the action of the Committee of the whole in striking out the appropriation for the Civil Service Commission. It is not probable that the Senate will attempt to defeat the appropriation. The spoilsmen in Congress having been trying for a dozen years to abolish the civil service system, or at least to make it useless, and only the force of public opinion has prevented their success. The wisdom and usefulness of civil service reform have stood the test of time, and the new policy of expansion renders it more essential than ever before. If the government makes our new possessions and dependencies the prey of the spoilsmen it will increase its own burdens in a corresponding and alarming degree. It is this rather than native insurrections that we have most to fear.

The Los Angeles Express declares that if Dan Burns is elected United States States Senator the Presidential vote in 1900 is liable to go in the Democratic column." At the same time the editor would not compromise his paper to go Democratic in any such event. Then if he would not he is simply holding up a raw-head and bloody-bones to his readers. Any man so obnoxious to the party as Burns seems to be with the Republicans would lose the party many votes, but he might be elected forty times and not make forty votes difference. The Express knew that Burns nominated the whole State ticket and yet it supported that ticket, the whole party knew that it was Burns' ticket, but it only added votes to it. There is nothing in the threat.

There is nothing in the mining law regarding the legality or illegality of location work on any day of the week. A minor can take and hold a claim. There is nothing in the Federal mining law which prevents any one locator from appropriating as many locations on the same lode as he may be able to find independent discoveries upon which to base them, but no location can legally exceed the statutory limit as to length and width, namely: 1500x600 feet.

The notorious well in the State capitol has been opened by Secretary of State Curry, and it has been re-christened "Curry's Cave." It is a sort of second hand dive and is used for lobbying and drinking purposes. It was closed the last time the Democrats had control of the Assembly, but everything is played wide open in Sacramento this year.

Just as soon as the people get into their heads that United States Senatorial elections are nothing more than a cross between an auction sale and a bargain counter, just so soon will the choice be taken from the State Legislature and placed in the hands of the masses, to be decided at the polls. It looks as if the reform would come soon, anyway.

From present indications the Legislature will be balloting till Spring on the question of our United States Senator.

The attempt to fleece the State by a gang of thieving lawyers is proving a cold frost to the participants.

Ordinance No. 64.

The Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo, State of California, Do Ordain As Follows:

SECTION 1. Every male person over the age of twenty-one and under fifty-five years of age, found in each Road District in the County of Inyo, State of California, between the first day of March, 1899, and the thirty first day of December, 1899, excepting all persons who were honorably discharged from service in the army or navy of the United States, at any time between the first day of April, in the year A. D. 1861, and the first day of September, A. D. 1865, and who have not paid the same in some other road district, must pay to the said County of Inyo, a Road Poll Tax of Two Dollars provided the same be paid before the first Monday in July, but if not paid prior to the first Monday in July then it shall be Three Dollars.

SECTION 2. Said Road Poll Tax shall be collected by the Assessor of the said County of Inyo, in the same manner that State Poll Taxes are collected, and shall be paid to the Treasurer of the said County of Inyo, and shall be placed to the credit of the several Road Districts of the said County of Inyo from which said Road Poll Tax was collected.

SECTION 3. This ordinance shall take effect and be in force from and after fifteen days from its passage, and all Ordinances and parts of ordinances of said Board in conflict herewith, are hereby repealed.

SECTION 4. This ordinance shall be published with the names of the members of said Board of Supervisors voting for and against the same, in the Inyo Independent, a newspaper published in the said County of Inyo, at least one week; said publication to be made for said time and before the expiration of said fifteen days

SUPERIOR COURT PROCEEDINGS.

Hon Walter A. Lamar, Judge.

FRIDAY, January 20th, 1899.

Marks & Cohn vs. John Kewley—George Watterson, administrator, substituted.

Albers vs. Richards.—Hearing set for Tuesday, February 21, 1899.

Coats vs. Hillside water Co.—Hearing set for February 16, 1899.

Woodin et al vs. Tourniel.—Motion for new trial denied.

BORN.

SLACKE—At Los Angeles, January 15, 1899, to Mr. and Mrs R. R. Slacke, a son.

Mrs. J. J. Morton has returned to her home at Keeler.

A. L. Cruppel, local manager for N. Wines, is in town.

Mrs. J. D. Shaw is visiting with friends in Independence.

Dr. C. P. Doyle went to Bishop last Tuesday, returning next day.

Rhine's are selling out their stock of goods. Now is a good time to secure a bargain.

Mr. F. McIver has gone to Sacramento to press his contest for a seat in the Assembly.

Beautiful weather is the rule now. The days are warm and bright and but very little frost at night.

Dr. Helen Mc Knight of Bishop spent last Sunday at Independence, the guest of Mrs. S. E. Vermilyea.

Sam Gruber has returned from a trip to the Coso Spring. His general health is very much improved.

J. D. Lewis has a new residence for Mrs. T. Rhine well under way. It is located immediately west of the pavilion.

Clarence Johnson and McGinnis are at work on a prospect near Coyote Spring in the Inyo range. The ore "horns" well, and the only question is the quantity.

George Kinney and family arrived at Independence last evening on their way home from Los Angeles, where they have been visiting for several months past.

H. Levy has completed his new hotel and opened it to the public. The building is nicely finished outside and handsomely furnished within, and is a credit to the town.

Willie Miller came up from Lone Pine yesterday returning to-day. He says his father expects to put on a stage line from Darwin to Ballarat, which will be a great accommodation to people in that region.

Dr. McQueen has been very busy all the week and will probably be here a week longer. However, if you want to make an appointment you had better see him right away.

N. E. Conklin writes from Bakersfield that there has been a good rain there, and feed is in splendid shape. He says that one more rain about a month hence will make the best season that the sheepmen have had for years.

Dr. I. J. Woodin has gone to Searles, San Bernardino County, where he is interested in some borax claims. He will be gone about two weeks, and during his absence Dr. J. D. Blair is looking after the patients in the county hospital.

Charley Summers came down from Bishop yesterday and will return to-morrow. He has shipped considerable beef to San Francisco this winter over the C. & C. The railroad people make every possible effort to accommodate local shippers and as a result the shipping of beef cattle is getting to be quite an industry.

As the result of too much hilarity at Lone Pine the county resources are increased by about four fines. It also proves that justice is cheaper at Independence than at Lone Pine. One young man plead guilty at Lone Pine and it cost him twenty dollars. The others objected to the price, obtained a change of venue to Independence and got off rejoicing with eight dollars each.

W. K. Miller writes from Ballarat that matters are booming out there. Stages are coming in loaded with passengers, and prospecting is being pushed in all directions. Mr. Miller is running a well equipped stage line from Randsburg to Ballarat. The stage leaves Randsburg Sundays and Thursdays at 7 o'clock a. m., arriving at Ballarat at 7 o'clock the same evening. It leaves Ballarat Tuesdays and Fridays, arriving at Randsburg at 7 o'clock the same evening.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Our local Weather Observer received the following bulletin this week from the station at San Juan, Puerto Rico section, showing the result of the late harvest.

COFFEE. The harvest ended early in December and produced an average of four quintals per cuerda (.522 sq. ft). On the coast near Guayama the yield was scanty owing to the want of rain and the interruptions caused by the war. In the district of Caguas it was better than usual and in the department of Arecibo it was very bad on account of the bandits. The future crop looks well, the weather is favorable and there is nothing injurious to the plants worth noting.

SUGAR CANE. The cutting season is approaching, experimental cutting having already been finished. It is believed that the yield will be much less than the average. In Guayama it is hoped that it will be better than usual. In Arecibo it is good. In Humacao and Caguas less than in other years.

TOBACCO. In Cagias the plants are developing favorably on account of frequent showers. The crop will be gathered in April, and it is calculated that the yield will be four quintals per cuerda.

RICE. The quantities sown in Corozal was small, but the yield was good. Harvest ended in December; yield four quintals per cuerda.

MINOR PRODUCTS. The harvest in Corozal was extremely abundant

Remarks of correspondence:

HUMACAO—Sr. Alcalde J. Masferrea. "On a well known plantation the crops are less than usual because of drought and insects."

Guayama—Don Domingo Pales. "The coffee plant may be said here to have two zones of cultivation; the cold or elevated zone, which produces a large berry of dark slate color, and the temperate coastal zone, which furnishes a smaller berry of lighter color but with a richer aroma." December 20.

A Group of Copper Mines

George F. Murphy, representing an English company, last Saturday purchased a group of copper claims in Santa Fe district, this county, from John Fagan and Wm. Callahan. The purchase price is $20,000 of which $1,000 was paid in cash, the balance to be paid as it comes out of the mines. Well known experts have been examining the mines during the past year, and it is on their report that the sale is made. It is the intention of the purchasers to commence work as soon as the snow has left the ground, and they are already negotiating for lumber for boarding houses etc. As yet they are undecided where to place the smelter, but either Soda Springs or Hawthorne will be the point selected. The mines are situated about 12 miles northeast of Soda. The ledges so far as developed are large and of high grade; but the amount of work done is not sufficient to establish their permanency. The best proof of their probable permanency, however, is the fact that experienced men are willing to expend a large amount of money developing them, and it is sincerely hoped that they will make a big success of their venture.—Hawthorne Bulletin.

This is good news to the farmers of Owens Valley. A lively mine near Soda means a ready market for farm produce. A paying copper mine in that section is likely to lead to the development of copper claims in our own vicinity.

The Ubaheba Copper Mine.

Arlie Mairs says that the big copper mine at Ubaheba is looking better than ever. There is a tunnel run seventy-five feet, all in ore. At the face of the tunnel a shaft has been sunk thirty-seven feet in the ledge. At the depth of ten feet a "horse" was encountered and the shaft sunk twenty-seven feet in barren ground. A cross-cut has been run from the bottom of the shaft eighteen feet through the barren "horse", when ore was struck and continues for the remaining seven feet, and the hanging wall has not yet been struck. The quantity of ore is practically unlimited, and is of good quality. Sufficient water can be had by piping. There is a good wagon road from the mine to the railroad, and it certainly seems to be an excellent proposition for capital to take hold of.

Smallpox at Mojave.

STOCKTON, Jan. 12.—President Ruggles of the State Board of Health received a dispatch to-day from Dr. Gardiner, Southern Pacific Railroad surgeon, that smallpox was prevailing at Mojave, and asking his presence there at once. Dr. Ruggles will leave on the first train to-day.

This dread disease has doubtless been carried to Mohave from El Paso where it has been epidemic for some time past. Many of the children here have never been vaccinated, and being in direct touch with Mojave as we are, it behooves us to take no chances on serious a matter. The vaccinating material should be procured and all of the children vaccinated at once.

Election Contest.

A telegram received this morning states that the contest case of McIver against Mack will come up before the contest committee of the Assembly next Monday evening. With one solitary exception the Republicans of the county deprecate Mr. McIver's action in bringing this action and express the wish that Mr. Mack retain his seat. It is now a well settled fact that the Burns "push" is behind Mr. McIver, and should he be seated his vote will be recorded in favor of the arch-corruptionist.

Report of The Highway Commissioners.

We are in receipt of the Report of the Department of Highways and present a portion of the same which will interest the people of Inyo County:

If any definite fact is revealed by the road investigations which the State has caused to be made during the past four years, it is that there has been a lack of system and economy in road work. This can be remedied by dissemination of practical knowledge through a technical department maintained by the State. In the neglected state of road building and the lack of knowledge as to proper utilization of work and materials, the supplying of this knowledge is as much a duty of the State to its citizens as the instruction it provides for its youth. In almost every county adequate materials exist, which if utilized with skill and judgment, will give us State highways of unsurpassed excellence. Among the list of counties and the road-building material found in each, we have Inyo—Silicious and volcanic rocks abundant, gravel and alkaline clays. Again, the proper material has been chosen, but the materials have not been properly utilized. The best rock roughly cracked up and dumped over a road will no more make a road surface than shingles dumped on a shed and scattered with a rake will make a roof. The best rock must be selected, properly crushed and screened and then spread, sprinkled and rolled in layers over a well graded and drained surface. In no county are suitable materials lacking. In the valley counties sand can be hauled and mixed with the alkaline adobes, and alkaline adobes can be hauled and mixed with the sand of the long reaches of sandy soil as occur in Stanislaus, Merced or Inyo. Again, the hard-pan of many counties when allowed to disintegrate, and then spread, sprinkled and rolled, makes a fair road surface. Wood is not a proper material to use in any part of a road or road structure. Its use should be limited to stakes to mark alignments or grades, and in special instances for bridge floors. To use it for drains, culverts or bridges is an absolute waste. In the valley counties, sand, gravel or broken rock can generally be obtained, which with cement and a little common sense and ingenuity can be made into abutments, piers, culverts of great durability.

In order to introduce system and economy into the expenditure of road funds, this department recommends the following laws and amendments:

1. An act to classify the roads in the State of California into three classes; the first class to include all highways designated as State Highways, the second class to include all highways designated as County Thoroughfares, and the third class to include District Roads.

Twenty-nine roads, when definitely located by the Department of Highways, are declared to belong to the first class.

No 6 of these roads is described as follows: A highway, commencing at a point upon the State Highway through Siskiyou County near the westerly base of Mt. Shasta, and extending thence southerly on the best grades and alignments, through the counties of Siskiyou, Shasta, Lassen, Plumas, Sierra, Nevada, Placer, El Dorado, Alpine, Mono, Inyo and Kern to Indian Wells in the last named county.

No. 21. A highway commencing at Port Harford in San Luis Obispo County and extending thence southeasterly and northeasterly through the counties of San Luis Obispo, Santa Barbara and Kern to Indian Wells in the last named county.

2. To amend Article 3, Sec. 2643, par. 7, so as to set apart fifty per cent of the levy therein made for permanent road-work on such highways as the county authorities may deem best.

3. An act to provide for the acceptance of highways of the first class by the State, and for the maintenance of the same, and to make an appropriation therefore.

4. To amend Sec. 2651 to correspond with Sec. 2643 as amended.

5. An act to provide for the construction, location and maintenance of highways owned and controlled by the State, by the levy of a tax and the creation of a fund therefor.

6. An amendment to Chap. CXVII, Statutes and Amendments of 1897. The wide tire law.

7. An amendment to chap. CCLXXII creating the Department of Highways.

There are two important links in the system of State Highways, which lie through such sparsely settled portions of the Sierras that it is impossible for the counties in which they lie to construct them. These links are a road connecting the easterly end of the Tioga road with Mono county roads; and a road around Rubicon point and the head of Emerald Bay connecting the roads now reaching the northern and southern ends of Lake Tahoe. The first link is important by reason of its position between Sonora Pass and Walkers Pass, in which distance of over two hundred miles no wagon road crosses the Sierras. The Tioga road leaves the Big Oak Flat road near Crocker's Station, crosses the Sierras at McLane's Pass over well located lines, along the most feasible route between the passes just mentioned. It reaches a point in the basin of Mono Lake on Levining creek at an elevation of about 9,800 feet above sea level. From this point the most feasible route is to the east down Levining creek to the Mono county road. We therefore recommend that an appropriation of $30,000 be made to construct a road-bed 16 feet wide to connect the Tioga road with Mono county roads, near the mouth of Levining creek.

To Whom It May Concern.

My wife, Lydia Willett, having without just cause or provocation, and without my consent, left my bed and board, I hereby give public notice to all whom it may concern that I will not be responsible for any debts she may contract.

J. C. WILLETT.

BERRIES IN ORCHARDS.

Growing Small Fruits Among Tree Fruits. Diagram For Mixed Planting.

Differences of opinion prevail as to the possibility and desirability of growing small fruits in peach, plum or apple orchards. A writer in The Rural New Yorker considers the question from several standpoints, giving a plan for mixed planting as follows:

In general cultivation it is not best to try to grow bush fruits or strawberries permanently in an orchard. There are no fruits that can be grown profitably where they are densely shaded by orchard trees. The question of planting small fruits in a young orchard must be considered from two different points of view. The man who makes a specialty of some one thing, as strawberries, and does not grow a succession of all sorts of fruits has an easier task than the man who has no specialty and grows all sorts of fruits in a succession. The first man can plant much more closely than the second. In general, too, strawberries are much better for the orchard than bush fruits, because they are in the soil only one year, and their annual removal gives a better chance for thorough tillage.

The cut shows a method of planting small fruits in an orchard which is essentially that practiced some time ago by Mr. John Craig at the Central Experiment farm, Ottawa. The trees are planted in the hexagonal fashion, each tree being 35 feet from every other. The bushes are check rowed in the rectangular fashion, the rows in one direction being 6 feet wide and in the other direction 5 feet 10 inches. As the trees increase in size the bushes inside the circles are the first to be removed.

Mr. Craig now thinks this plan too complicated. The square system of planting is simpler than the hexagonal system (which is also called the triangular or quincunx), and it is generally adopted on cheap lands and in orchards on a vast scale.

The hexagonal system seems more complicated at first, but it is more economical of space, and is therefore the better system for high priced lands. The more valuable the land the more ingenious and complicated the plans are likely to be. The plan illustrated would seem wasteful to a raspberry specialist. In the figure the berry bushes are 6 feet by 5 feet 10 inches. In general cultivation black raspberries are set 8 feet by 6 feet and reds 8 feet by 5 feet. A specialist can plant closer.

To The Public.

During the many years we have been doing business with you we have never made a practice of advertising fake sales. We have concluded to make some important changes in our business, and in consequence offer our entire stock at actual cost for cash. This sale will continue for ninety days and will be without reserve. This is an opportunity never before offered the people of Inyo and should be taken advantage of. At the end of the time specified we shall announce some radical changes in our business. Thanking you for the generous patronage you have accorded us and soliciting its continuance, we remain,

Yours Respectfully,

The Boy and His Cap.

"I can't find my cap anywhere," is a sentence more or less familiar in the household, that being what the boy says, looking for his cap, when he wants to go out to play. Early in the search he enlists his mother, and that may make a serious business of it. She has to drop her dusting or whatever household work she may be engaged in, and the search may take a long time.

"Where did you put it when you came in?" is a question sure to be asked sooner or later, but all the boy can answer is:

"I don't know."

And then the search goes on everywhere, over and under, in all sorts of places, all at a great loss of time, if not of temper. It is found at last, as most things are in time, and in some simple, easy place, which makes the finding of it all the more exasperating.

The boy takes it and goes out to play and straightway forgets all about it; but it may take quite a little time to restore the normal calm in the house.

It is a mystery how the boy manages to lose his cap as often as he does, but it appears to be a boy's way, and common to almost all.—New York Sun.

English Suburban Homes.

In the United States you are far ahead of England in respect to new suburban homes. Whatever may be the faults of the imitations of Richardson—America's greatest architect—or even of the queer gabled and verandaed villas which for some inscrutable reason are named after the good Queen Anne, there is something picturesque about most of these buildings—if it is only the usually good sky line. But the modern suburban homes in England are monotonously ugly. As a rule they are run up in rows by some speculative builder who is his own architect.—Montague Marks in Art Amateur.

AN ADVENTURE : : : : : : : IN THE ROCKIES.

IN September, 1870, a small party of us went up from Georgetown, Colo., to enjoy a few weeks' hunting and fishing in Middle Park.

As cooks, camp-keepers and general utility men we had old Joe Bruette, a French-Canadian ex-voyageur, and his grown son, Peter, both thoroughly efficient, pleasant fellows, and so warmly attached to each other that nothing less than inexorable necessity could keep them apart for twenty-four hours; nor would either of them ever engage with a party of tourists or sportsmen unless the other could go along, even if both had to work for one man's pay.

After spending a day or two at Hot Sulphur Springs, we moved our camp down to Williams River, almost under the shadow of Williams River Mountains, where fish and game were at that time plentiful.

The trout, however, did not take kindly to our artificial flies, so, early one morning, while his son was doing the camp chores, Joe, taking a couple of empty pickle bottles along, went out toward the foothills to gather grasshoppers for bait.

He had no more than half a mile to go, and as the night-chilled insects would be easily caught we expected him to return within an hour. But he did not come, nor had he done so when Peter, already, as we thought, absurdly anxious, announced breakfast.

About forty-five minutes after Joe left we had heard several rifle or pistol shots echoing among the foothills, but such sounds were so common that at the moment we paid no attention to them. While we were at breakfast one of us, calling these reports to mind, carelessly asked Peter if his father had taken his revolver along.

"Why, yes, for sure; he never goes anywhere without that," replied the young man, "but I'm afraid he's got into some trouble this time, or he'd been back long ago. Maybe, though, he's wounded an elk and has followed it into the mountains."

After waiting another half hour in the vain hope of his father's return, Peter became so distressed that, at his earnest request, Dr. Lewis, Fred Reid and I agreed to accompany him on a search for the missing man.

Arming ourselves with rifles and revolvers, we set out at once and, on coming to a particularly green stretch of grass at the base of the foothills, found the two pickle bottles, both duly corked and full of grasshoppers, but no sign whatever of Joe.

Then we three began to circle around, looking, but quite uselessly, over the matted grass for footprints, while Peter struck out for a grove of young cottonwoods, bounding one side of the meadow. He had not been gone five minutes when from out the thickest depths rang a horrified shriek, followed by a frenzied cry of:

"Here, men, here! Hurry! Oh, for Heaven's sake, hurry!"

Dashing like madmen across the little plain, we reached the distressed youth in a few moments, and then saw a fearful sight, indeed. In the midst of a patch of trampled, blood-stained bushes lay the seemingly lifeless form of poor Joe. The scalp was stripped from the front part of his head and hung down over his eyes. His left shoulder was frightfully lacerated, and the arm on that side badly mangled, and broken in two places; the clothing was torn from the upper part of his body, and on his naked breast gaped four ragged furrows, evidently ploughed by a single stroke from the claws of some giant wild beast. Whatever the enemy, it was obvious that the old hunter had made a desperate fight, for all the chambers of his revolver were empty, and his knife encrusted with gore, while the underbrush around was beaten flat and the ground trodden into blood-moistened dust.

Peter, dry-eyed, but piteously moaning, was lying by the senseless body, tenderly clasping it in his arms, and on seeing us, exclaimed: "My poor father has been killed by a grizzly bear; and, so help me Heaven; I'll never taste food till I've destroyed the brute. Life is no use to me now."

"Why, Pete, my boy," said Dr. Lewis, who had knelt by the old man's side and was holding a pocket flask of brandy to his lips, "your father is not dead. He'll regain consciousness directly. Meantime, you run to the camp for my instrument case and tell our friends there to hurry along with the spring wagon, a few blankets and such other articles as they know will be necessary."

Actually hugging the doctor in his joyous revulsion of feeling, and softly kissing his father's unhurt hand, Peter sprang to his feet and was off like a shot. Going and returning, he must cover nearly a mile, but in less than ten minutes he was back again with the little box of surgical instruments and some clean clothing for the wounded man, now sitting up and in full possession of his senses. On seeing this, the affectionate son dropped to his knees in an ecstasy of thanksgiving and fairly wept aloud for joy.

Two minutes later the wagon thundered up to the edge of the grove with our comrades, who had thoughtfully brought splints, sponges, bandages and, most needful of all, two covered buckets full of warm water.

Then, assisted by his pupil, Fred Reid, the doctor cleansed and stitched in place the pendant scalp, dressed the breast and shoulder wounds, set and bound up the broken arm and made his patient as comfortable as possible. But the tough old fellow would not ride back to camp. Accompanied by Dr. Lewis and Reid, he actually walked, coolly telling the wagon men to be sure, when ready to return, not to forget the grasshoppers! And I may as well say right here that in less than two months he was sound as ever, though around the edges of the replaced scalp appeared a semi-circular streak of snow-white hair.

It seems that on going for some purpose into the grove he almost tumbled over, not a grizzly, but an enormous cinnamon bear, at which he rashly fired. Then ensued a terrific fight, ending in apparent victory for the savage brute, which, though wounded by six revolver bullets and a number of knife thrusts, somehow managed to get away, only, however, to die; for as soon as Joe had left for camp, Peter, Tom Cooper and I took up the blood-stained trail and found the monster's carcass before we had gone a mile.

"Ha! ha!" jubilantly shouted Pete, "my brave old father won the fight, after all, and he's killed the biggest cinnamon ever seen in these mountains, I'll bet!"

The dead bear, a male, lay in a clump of aspen scrub. All three of us had leaned our rifles against a rock about twenty feet away, and, stooping down, were beginning to remove the pelt, when suddenly, with open mouth, blazing eyes and a hoarse shriek of rage, a huge she cinnamon crashed through the surrounding brush, and before we could draw our revolvers, sent Cooper and myself spinning, heels over head, to the ground, where for a few seconds we lay, stunned and helpless.

Fortunately, the furious beast, seeming at the moment intent only upon examining the body of her mate, had merely whirled us aside by her own momentum without striking at us at all, and neither of us was seriously hurt. But the instant she found that her consort was really dead, and while we still lay dazed, she turned upon us for vengeance.

So great had been the force of the creature's first rush against and between us that we were hurled fully fifteen feet away, but, luckily, within five feet of the stacked arms. Yet this fact would not have saved us from being slain as we lay had not Peter, who never, under any circumstances, got rattled, bounded forward at the first glimpse of the bear and secured his gun—and not the fraction of a second too soon.

Too confused and dizzy to even recollect that we had revolvers, we were vainly trying to rise. The old she, frothing at the mouth with fury, was within three feet of our temporarily paralyzed bodies. Next moment those terrible paws would have crushed our skulls like egg shell, or those gleaming teeth have been buried in our throats—but something happened! In order, I suppose, to more effectually exert her prodigious strength, the maddened beast reared partially up; Peter, now standing behind us with his great buffalo rifle leveled, was coolly waiting for this foreseen move. The bear's mouth was wide open, and he fired into it pointblank. The one and a half ounce pointed bullet, driven by six drachms of powder, tore its way through neck and spinal cord, coming out at the back of the creature's head, and she dropped dead as suddenly as if struck by a lightning bolt.

In a few minutes Tom and I were all right again, and by noon both bears were properly skinned, but the hides were so heavy that it was no easy task to carry them back to where the wagon still waited.

On arriving in camp with our trophies old Joe went nearly wild with joy, and I rather think that he and his gallant boy found this the most profitable trip they had ever undertaken.—New York Ledger.

Entertaining an Angel Unawares.

A newsboy took the Sixth avenue elevated at Park place at noon, says the New York World, and sliding into one of the cross seats, fell asleep. At Grand street two young women got on and took the seats opposite the lad. His feet were bare and his hat had fallen off. Presently the younger girl leaned over and placed her muff under the little fellow's dirty cheek. An old gentleman in the next seat smiled at the act, and without saying anything held out a quarter with a nod toward the boy. The girl hesitated a moment and then reached for it. The next man just as silently offered a dime, a woman across the aisle held out some pennies, and before she knew it the girl with flaming cheeks had taken money from every passenger in that end of the car. She quietly slid the amount into the sleeping lad's pocket, removed her muff gently from under his head without rousing him, and got off at Twenty-third street, including all the passengers in a pretty little inclination of the head that seemed full of thanks and the possession of a common secret.

It is unfortunate that such sensible accomplishments as bread making, sewing, etc., are not given the publicity in society that is given dancing and piano playing.

A Wonderful Floating Snail.

There is a small snail which is so fond of the sea that it never comes to land and it builds such a capital boat for itself and its eggs that while large ships are sinking and steamers are unable to face the storm it tosses about in perfect safety.

The little snail is of a violet color and is therefore called ianthina. It has a small shell and there projects from the under part of the body a long, tongueline piece of flesh. This is the raft, and it is built upon most scientific principles, for it has compartments in it for air. It is broad and the air compartments are underneath, so that it cannot capsize.

Moreover, the snail knows how to stow away its cargo, for the oldest eggs and those which hatch the soonest are placed in the center, and the lightest and newest on the sides of the raft. The ianthina fills its own air compartments by getting a globule of air underneath its head, the body is then curved downward beneath the raft, and the head being tilted on one side, the air rushes up and fills the spaces. It feeds on a beautiful little jellyfish, which has a flat, raftlike form with a pretty little sail upon it, and they congregate in multitudes when the sea is calm.

Sometimes specimens are washed upon the northwestern coast of France and when they are handled they give out a violet dye.—Philadelphia Press.

Microbes In Milk.

It will be readily granted that the inspection of milk and its sources of supply is of even more importance from a public health point of view than the inspection of meat, since milk is so largely used as the food of infants.

Milk immediately it is taken from the healthy cow contains no microbes. Hardly has the milk settled in the pail than they abound, so many as 10,000 in one-quarter cubic inch having been detected. The question which naturally presents itself is, "Where do they come from?" From the soiled teats, from the soiled hands of the workers, from the atmosphere of the milking shed and from the pails themselves. They possess the property of propagating very rapidly.

M. de Freudeurich of the Berne laboratory asserts that milk just drawn containing in one-quarter cubic inch 9,000 microbes seven hours later was found to contain 60,000. After a period of 25 hours had elapsed 5,000,000 microbes were present in the same quantity of milk, and if the temperature be raised to 95 degrees F. the microbio population of the same milk during the same time would reach the enormous total of 812,500,000.

Children appear particularly prone to contract consumption through the agency of milk containing tubercle bacilli.—Chambers' Journal.

How We Walk.

In The Literary Digest appears a translation of a review of "Comment on Marche" ("How We Walk"), the latest book on the subject by Messrs. Regnault and Raoul. In this work it is claimed that we have been wrongly educated in walking and that the erect posture and firm step that we have been led to believe were evidences of health and strength are conventional and vicious.

M. Marey, who wrote the introduction to the volume, says that there is a style of walking that enables one, without excessive fatigue, to go distances of from 20 to 25 miles in a third of the time usually required. This may be accomplished by walking with the knees bent and the body inclined forward, a method which has been observed in professional pedestrians, mountaineers, peasants, hunters and soldiers fatigued by long marches. In not adopting this method, it is claimed that, as with all the other acts of life, we remain slaves of conventional æsthetics.

Makes the Spot Vanish.

A slight rap may cause a bruise, or a slight blow a black one, sore and tender. But it is easy to cure a bruise by the use of St. Jacobs Oil, and make the spot vanish and the soreness heal.

Stock when on dry feed alone requires plenty of water. See that it is supplied conveniently and that it is not too cold.

No household is complete without a bottle of the famous Jesse Moore Whiskey. It is a pure and wholesome stimulant recommended by all physicians. Don't neglect this necessity.

The woman who makes her husband a Christmas present of a cuckoo clock for the sitting room mantel would probably go home to her mother if he gave her a new shaving stand.

The Best Seeds Absolutely Necessary.

We cannot too strongly nor too often urge the supreme importance of planting seeds that are perfectly pure and fresh. Seeds that are offered at cheap prices are almost invariably of doubtful origin and uncertain age, sure to cause the planter dissapointment and loss. The thoughtful planter's only surety lies in buying seeds sent out by a conscientious and trustworthy house. A vast number of American gardners have (and have had for years) the utmost confidence in seeds that bear the name, D. M. Ferry & Co., Detroit, Mich. The present generation of planters can hardly remember the time when Ferry's Seeds were not on sale everywhere each year as regularly planted by thousands—with the greatest faith in unvarying quality of the seeds and in the integrity of the firm that grew them. Every planter, whether already a buyer of Ferry's Seeds or not, should send for Ferry's Annual for 1899. It is mailed free to anyone who writes for it.

Rosebery's Definition of Memory.

Here is a joli mot of Lord Rosebery's—would one ever expect mots from Lord Rosebery?—told in our garden by a woman who heard him say it at a dinner. Some one asked him what memory was. "Memory," said Lord Rosebery, "is the feeling that steals over us when we listen to our friends' original stories."—Harper's Bazar.

SERMONS OF THE WEEK

Good Influences.—Good suggestions and influences do not drive or force us; they only lead.—Dr. Pratt, Swedenborgian, San Francisco, Cal.

Man.—Man has power over the laws of the universe, and can and does oftentimes bend them to his will.—Rev. R. F. Coyle, Presbyterian, Detroit, Mich.

God's Work.—In the great church of God there is somewhere a work for every honest man.—Rev. Wm. J. Long, Congregationalist, North Cambridge, Mass.

Rest.—The rest God speaks of is not the alternative of something else, but the quality which marks the highest attainment of the human soul.—Dr. Storrs, Congregationalist, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Fatherhood of God.—Some people say that the fatherhood of God is all the theology they want. With one exception, I am inclined to accept that view.—Dr. Abbott, Congregationalist, Brooklyn, N. Y.

God's Question.—When God asks a question he pronounces a judgment. His question searches us through and through. His question carries its own answer.—Rev. D. Gregg, Congregationalist, Brooklyn, N. Y.

A New Epoch.—There is a class of people who have outgrown the church and who find the satisfaction that they require in literature, science and many other new theories of life.—Rev. Thos. Van Ness, Unitarian, Boston, Mass.

The Idea of God.—The idea of God holds a very large place in human life. It matters not how we got this idea. We have it and live in it. The idea emerges whenever we get at the conception of truth.—Dr. Patton, Methodist, Princeton, N. J.

The Great Truth.—Among certain elements of faith which are fundamental we must emphasize the great truth that man is a spirit, the conviction that man is free and the fact of grace.—Rev. J. N. Beard, Methodist, San Francisco, Cal.

Honor and Happiness.—Honor and happiness are not dealt out in due proportion to men's just deserts. Many who are good and kind suffer the loss of fortune, reputation and everything that makes life worth living.—Rev. Dr. McElveen, Congregationalist, Brooklyn, New York.

The Happiest People.—It needs some one very often to show us how fortunate we are. The happiest people in the world are by no means those who have the most to be happy with, but those who are most aware of what they have, and who make the most of it.—Rev. W. H. Lyon, Congregationalist, Brookline, Mass.

The Invisible God.—As we are taught in the peaceful hours of childhood, so we are taught in the years of manhood. God is everywhere, yet God is invisible; and the angels of God, his ministering spirits, his viceroys, they, too, are spirits.—Rev. J. J. Prendergast, Roman Catholic, San Francisco, Cal.

America's Duty.—America owes a duty to Spain. She will utterly perish unless she learns self-reliance, and she will never learn this until her colonies are taken from her. For this reason the United States should entirely separate the mother country from her colonies for the advantage of both.—Rev. C. C. Earle, Baptist, Boston, Mass.

Our Flag.—Our flag is a symbol of light, the banner of dawn. The poor slave, the downtrodden creatures of a foreign despotism, the starving victims of a barbarous oppression, find light and freedom beneath it. In all these years it never lost a star. God bless the soldier who goes with it.—Rev. W. H. Moreland, Episcopalian, San Francisco, Cal.

Repentance.—If there is to be a genuine repentance, there must be somebody to repent to, as well as something to repent from. In John the Baptist's preaching the emphasis laid on the heinousness of sin was strong, but the emphasis on the loveliness of Christ was stronger. His denunciation of sin was terrible, but his adoration of Jesus knew no bounds.—Rev. J. A. Francis, Baptist, New York City.

SALISBURY'S BUMPS.

British Premier's Qualities as Indicated by His Head.

This is the head of Lord Salisbury, British premier. Self-esteem, cautiousness, imagination, perception and reason are strongly marked. Hope and personal ambition are small. He has firmness and a wide horizon. His qualities as indicated by his head are, indeed, the same as displayed in his career.

THE STATESMAN'S CHARACTERISTICS.

Hot Baths.

A hot bath is usually decried as provocative of colds and other evils. Every one knows of cases of severe illness occurring from exposure to the outer air after such ablutions. And yet nothing is more refreshing, as nothing is more harmless, if properly taken. The reason is that one should use the hot bath as one does that of very cold water, merely as a plunge, followed by quick and thorough rubbing and massage.

Lodging house clerk—Bed with bath, 15 cents. Weary Watkins—I guess I'd rather pay a little more an' not take the bath.—Indianapolis Journal.

A girl is fickle when she is eighteen, but after she is twenty-eight, she finds it is the men who are fickle.

Those Black Eyes.

"The small son of the people," says the Philadelphia Record, "and his little sister were inside the great West Philadelphia church for the first time. 'Um—m—my! but it's a beaut place,' he whispered. 'I bet people wot belong here comes every time dey can.' Her breath came to her in little gasps. Her soiled little finger pressed on his with thrilled intensity. Her eyes feasted on the splendid chancel. 'Heaven mus' be nex' door,' she said. They hardly moved throughout the service, and never once let go each other's hands, for it was as a strange land. At last the sweet voiced procession of choir boys came down the aisle. At its head was a slim young seraph, with a face as fair and pure as the linen he wore. Faint, dark circles beneath his eyes completed the ethereal effect.

"'Is dem angels?' the little girl began, but stopped short, surprised at the look on her brother's face.

"'Dat kid in front's Bill Griggs, wot I licked last week fer swipin' t'ings from ole Mrs. Maguire's apple stand. He ain't got over dem black eyes I gev 'im yet. Come on, let's git out.' His face was stern and set as they went. She furtively wiped a tear."

Field and the Street Arabs.

McClure's Magazine relates the following anecdote of Eugene Field, whose fondness for children was his dominant trait:

Never was a man more devoted to his wife. Nevertheless on the day that made her his he was guilty of keeping her waiting for him at the church. The bridal party had assembled and were rapidly becoming uneasy. At length, after an anxious delay, some one went out in search of the missing bridegroom.

He was found on the street a short distance away, down on his knees in the mud, absorbed in settling a dispute between two small street arabs, which had arisen over a game of marbles. Listening with eager interest to the testimony vociferated at either ear by the belligerent parties and their friends and trying to evolve a peace compromise out of a very lively quarrel, he was abruptly reminded that just then he had something more important to attend to, and hastened penitently away to make his anxious bride Mrs. Field.

Feel the Influence.

Cold and heat alike aggravate Neuralgia, because the nerves feel the cold and heat sensitively, but nerves are sensitive to treatment and feel the influence of St. Jacobs Oil, which cures the ailment promptly.

About five minutes after a man has started an argument with a woman he feels as helplessly mad as he does when he has leaned up against some fresh paint with nobody near enough to hear him swear.

In one of Carlyle's private letters sold in London recently he says: "Oliver Cromwell had no squint, stare or deficiency of any kind in the eyes of him. One eye, probably the left—but I am not sure—was considerably bigger than the other."

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—It is with pleasure that I write to you of the benefit I have derived from using your wonderful Vegetable Compound. I was very ill, suffered with female weakness and displacement of the womb.

"I could not sleep at night, had to walk the floor, I suffered so with pain in my side and small of my back. Was troubled with bloating, and at times would faint away; had a terrible pain in my heart, a bad taste in my mouth all the time and would vomit; but now, thanks to Mrs. Pinkham and her Vegetable Compound, I feel well and sleep well, can do my work without feeling tired; do not bloat or have any trouble whatever.

"I sincerely thank you for the good advice you gave me and for what your medicine has done for me."

"Cannot Praise It Enough."

Miss GERTIE DUNKIN, Franklin, Neb., writes:

"I suffered for some time with painful and irregular menstruation, falling of the womb and pain in the back. I tried physicians, but found no relief.

"I was at last persuaded to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and cannot praise it enough for what it has done for me. I feel like a new person, and would not part with your medicine. I have recommended it to several of my friends."

THE OLD FARM.

I love to dream about the days
 I spent upon the farm;
The theme is rich in memories
 That never lose their charm.
Though early lured away by tales
 Of traffic's golden rain,
How oft, how oft I've longed to turn
 Back to the farm again!

I've toiled for gain in busy marts
 And scorned the paths of ease;
I've wooed with fervor fortune's smiles,
 Across the briny seas;
But neither fabled wealth of Ind
 Nor fame's ambrosial wine
Could e'er afford the lost delights
 Of that old home of mine.

There every humble duty bore
 Of rich reward its meed,
And sweet approval gave a smile
 For every kindly deed;
There peaceful sleep did wait upon
 Each day of toil and care,
And hope gave strength each dawning day,
 Its burden new to bear.

There peaceful scenes on every hand
 Did e'er beguile the eye;
The woods, the hills; the winding streams,
 Reflecting azure sky;
The kine, contented, browsing o'er
 The blossom broidered wold;
The ewes and lambs, at wane of day,
 Returning to the fold—

All filled my little world with joy
 And bade brief sorrows fly,
As soothes the infant's griefs away
 A mother's lullaby.
Nor sordid aims did mar the flow
 Of innocent delight,
While honor's precepts were instilled
 With love's persuasive might.

Then take me back, oh, take me back
 To that fair spot once more,
To me more lovely than the famed Estates of classic lore!
Oh, take me back and let me rest
 There, safe from grief and harm,
To spend my brief declining days
 Upon the dear old farm!

HER NEXT MOVE.

GERALDINE FOWLER sorted her mail somewhat listlessly. Some of the envelopes held rejections. She could tell them by their plumpness. There seemed to be an unusual number this morning.

There were one or two acceptances. She smiled as she drew the checks from their envelopes and laid them carefully away. It had paid, after all, her coming to New York. She had gained her experience and broadened her outlook. Yet, perhaps, it had made her restless as well.

She certainly had been, since Godfrey Taylor crossed her path.

A troubled look came into her eyes as she took up his letter and read it.

A flush spread over her face.

"I thought so," she said as she finished reading and dropped it on the desk. Then, with an impulsive movement, she leaned forward and buried her head in her hands.

It had all come so rapidly, this new emotion. Less than three weeks ago she had forgotten the existence of Godfrey Taylor. To be sure, she dimly recalled the gay times she had had with him one summer, and her admiration of him because he was an editor, and could talk familiarly of books and dramatic events. She had even fancied she liked him, but he had gone out of her life.

Suddenly she had heard from him. He had seen a story of hers and had written. This had been followed by other letters, and here was the culmination:

I have not found you to lose you. I want you to marry me at once. Come to Washington for the fall, enjoy all the advantages I can give you. You can go into society—I have means—you can entertain literary people and indulge your fondness for the stage, which I remember, and in January we will go abroad. I shall probably be appointed to some office there.

Her eyes glistened.

"It is what I have always wanted," she murmured. "And Edward——" She stopped. The faithful lover at home had hardly entered her mind.

"Well, I could not go back there any way and be content," she sighed. "My life here has spoiled all that. He must wake from his dream sooner or later. He told me to be free; I will be free."

She arose from her chair and pushed back the scattered papers.

"I will be free to live my life in this glorious fashion that is offered me. It belongs to me. I was made for just such a life."

She smiled triumphantly. Then she seized the pen and directed an envelope to a little far-away country town.

"I am tired of it all," she wrote on a slip of paper.

She paused. "The truth will come later," she said, as she hastily added. "My next move will surprise you."

Then she wrote to the other one.

"You may come if you like," she said; "I shall be glad to see you, and perhaps——"

* * * * * * * * *

Edward Wherritt entered the postoffice with an eager step. A glad light crept into his eyes as he saw the familiar handwriting, and a thrill of pleasure ran through the man as he took the letter from the postmistress. His hand trembled a bit, insomuch that some papers fell to the floor, and he laughed a happy laugh as he bent and picked them up.

Then he slipped them all into his pocket and turned away.

It was a long time since he had heard from her. His hand closed tightly upon the letter in his pocket. It was there now, fresh from her hand. He would not hasten to read it. It was there—his. No power on earth could take it from him.

The light in his eyes grew deeper, and a happy smile played about his mouth.

He had several errands to do. He must visit the news stand first. There might be something of hers in one of the magazines. His quick eye caught her name, and he slipped the publication into his pocket.

Then he finished the errands and walked rapidly toward home, his hand still closed on the letter, and his mind speculating as to what it would say. Would it tell of some new success? How proudly he had watched her career! Perhaps it would say she had decided to stay another six months in New York.

Well, never mind. He could stand it, and the end would be so much nearer.

The letter felt thin. After all, probably it was but a hurried note, to tell of some sudden pleasure she wanted to share with him.

His heart gave a bound. Any way, it was from her—that was enough.

The words were so few.

"My next move may surprise you," he repeated.

A quick fear seized his heart.

He turned the page for more, but that was all. Not even a signature.

"She must have left out the rest by mistake," he said, as he held the open page in his hand. "But whatever the move is, I know it must be right."

His eyes traveled fondly to the face smiling down the wall.

* * * * * * * * *

He rose early the next morning. It was only just growing light, but his sleep had been broken, and he would go down to the early mail and see if the rest of the letter had not come. Surely Geraldine would send it when she found it had been left out. He could even fancy the little laugh she would give when she discovered it, and how quickly she would enclose it in another envelope and add a few words as to her carelessness.

He pictured it all in his mind, as he swung through the village street with an eager tread.

The little office was not open. The morning train was not due yet. Slowly he wandered toward the station, and stood gazing down the track from whence his letter would come. He stamped his feet a bit impatiently, and took out his watch.

It was coming at last!

With a roar that would seem to waken the yet sleeping people, the train drew in.

The morning papers and the mail bag were thrown out on to the platform.

The roll of papers bounded away into the wet grass.

He sprang after them with a laugh. The early morning air was exhilarating. He grasped them in his hand and waved them triumphantly at the baggage master as he leaned out of the door of his car.

Then he turned. A woman stood beside him.

"I have come home," Geraldine said.

For an instant he gazed at her with startled eyes. Then with a quick movement he gathered her into his big arms and drew her close. Her tired head fell on to his strong shoulder, and the sad, pleading eyes were hidden from view. Her hat fell unheeded to the ground, as he kissed hair and forehead again and again.

This was her next move.—The Housewife.

CHINESE LOADED WITH MONEY.

Remarkable Discovery in the Clothing of Two California Celestials.

The turnkeys in the Los Angeles county jail had an interesting experience recently on the arrival of two Chinese from San Diego, pending deportation. The men had been searched by the San Diego officers, and were reported to have no articles on their persons, but the Los Angeles jail officials thought it would be just as well to apply their methods of investigation, and the outcome was a lot of money, nuggets and gold dust.

The coolies had little packages of gold dust carefully packed away between each toe; others were braided into the strands of their queues; bank notes were cleverly stitched into the lining of their hats and the creases of their clothes. In fact, almost every place, mentionable and unmentionable, where coin, bills or gold dust could be hidden, contained its quota, the total found amounting to something over $40 in bills, as much more in silver, and no one knows exactly how much in gold dust from Lower California mines.

The money of course belongs to the Chinese, but if they had been allowed to keep it on their persons while locked up, they would surely have been robbed of every cent of it by the other prisoners.—San Francisco Examiner.

Goodly Prices for Popular Songs.

Sir Arthur Sullivan is said to have received £10,000 in royalties for "The Lost Chord," the highest price received for an individual number, says Answers. Two thousand pounds per line was the profit realized by the publisher of that favorite song of Sims Reeves, "My Pretty Jane." The music was by Sir Henry Bishop and the words were composed by Edward Fitzball, who was born at Burwell, in Cambridgeshire. The profit realized on the song "In Old Madrid" was £15,000. The song, "Tommy Atkins," during the first year of its existence, brought the publishers, who had purchased it for a guinea, a profit of £6,000, or over £100 per week. Milton Wellings received ten guineas for "Some Day" and the publishers about £10,000, and the same composer's "Golden Love," for which eight guineas was given, probably brought £8,000 to the publishers.

WHITE POLAR BEAR.

HABITS AND CHARACTERISTICS OF THE ANIMAL.

General Greely Writes Interestingly of This Largest and Strongest Member of the Bear Family—Lives Among the Drifting Ice-Fields.

THE aquatic member of the bear family, the Thalarctos maritimus of naturalists, is also the strongest, largest and most interesting species, writes General A. W. Greely, of the United States army. While its shuffling gait leaves its broad trails along the northern continental coasts of Asia and America, yet this animal's favorite hunting fields are rather among the drifting ice-fields or open water-holes of the Parry, Spitzbergen and Franz Josef archipelagoes, and the bordering islands of continental Greenland.

The polar bear is an animal of striking contrasts. The snowy whiteness of its fur is sharply set off by the blackness of its snout and claws; its short, rounded ears make its long head and neck most pronounced; its tiny tail seems a most ludicrous ending of its immense haunches, which are in keeping only with the enormous teeth and ponderous claws. Some of these contrasts are but faint in the specimens in captivity, whose abnormal methods of life naturally modify their characteristics.

The most northern latitude in which the track of a bear has been observed is that noted by Lieutenant Lockwood, of my expedition, in eighty-three degrees, three minutes north, near Cape Benet; and strangely enough this animal was traveling to the northeast.

Occasionally a polar bear, luxuriating in rich hunting afforded by an ice-pack, is carried by drift far into southern latitudes, and thus this species sometimes reaches the coasts of Labrador and the southern shores of Hudson Bay, or meets its fate in the North Atlantic as the disintegrating floes finally dissolve.

It was long asserted that these bears could swim neither very far nor fast—an opinion arising, doubtless, from the awkwardness that marks their movements—but it is now held that the animal is almost amphibious. Payer says that four men, on one occasion, could not pull a boat fast enough to catch either of two swimming bears. Capt. Sabine, while with Parry's expedition, midway in Barrow Strait, forty miles wide, saw a bear swimming strongly; no ice was visible from the ship, and the circumstances seemed to indicate that the animal was crossing the strait from shore to shore.

No systematic effort seems to have been made to obtain data as to the largest animals killed by hunters, but Sir John Ross measured sixteen bears killed in Boothia Felix, North America, of which nine were males and seven females. The average length from snout to end of tail was ninety-four inches for the males and seventy-eight and seven-tenths inches for the females. The largest measured one hundred and one and a half inches, and weighed ten hundred and twenty-eight pounds, the animal being in poor condition.

The largest specimen of which I have personal knowledge is one killed in Bering Sea, whose skin is owned by Senator William P. Frye, of Maine. It measures nine feet seven inches, exclusive of the tail of two inches, and its girth around the body just back of the forelegs is ten feet.

The largest specimen recorded by a scientific observer was one of the many bears killed by the expedition of Leigh Smith, which was shipwrecked on the southwest part of Franz Josef archipelago, 1881-'82. Dr. W. H. Neale, the naturalist of the expedition, says that some of the bears were very large; that one measured eleven feet exclusive of the tail. There is, then, no reasonable ground to question the veracity of the statement of Gerit De Veer, a companion of Barentz in his third voyage, that there was killed in Nova Zembla, in 1597, a bear which was twelve feet long, possibly including the tail.

While the polar bear is by preference non-vegetarian, living upon fish and the flesh of the seal, when he can procure it, nevertheless he will occasionally eat seaweeds, and in cases of necessity has been known to subsist for some time on land vegetation. Nordenskiold relates that Dr. Theel shot at Port Dickson an exceedingly fat old bear which had evidently been living on grass for some time.

The skill and caution with which Bruin does his sea-hunting are described by the Eskimos as follows: The bear slips quietly into the water and swims to the leeward of the seal, from whence he silently approaches by a series of dives, the last being so timed that he rises in front of the spot where the seal is lying. If the alarmed victim attempts as usual to roll into the sea he falls into the clutches of the bear, and efforts to escape on the ice are equally futile.

The polar bear, while rarely attacking man, has frequently visited the tents, ships and houses of Arctic travelers; but as a rule he speedily retreats, doubtless through caution, at hearing unfamiliar sounds.

The most notable of all the fatalities resulting from an unprovoked attack on man by the white bear is that which occurred in connection with Barentz's voyage to the Arctic regions. It is said that the beast seized one man by surprise, killed another who came with a party to rescue the first, mangled both, and was finally killed by shots fired by other members of the party.

It is not unusual to hear the polar bear stigmatized as a coward—no more dangerous to meet than an old sheep. Others liken him to a North American Indian for his treachery, cowardice and intractibility. The polar bear is not a dashing, impulsive animal, but he is endowed with caution and sagacity to an unusual extent. In nearly every instance the success of the bear in obtaining sustenance depends upon stealthy and concealing methods whereby he is withdrawn from the view of his victim until he is ready to strike.

While it is true that a skillful hunter, with good firearms, stands in no great danger from the polar bear, which he usually attacks at a disadvantage to the animal; nevertheless it requires a man of iron nerve and dauntless courage to face one which has been wounded or otherwise enraged. And yet many of the Eskimos, without firearms, and provided only with their bows and arrows, lances or knives, do not hesitate to attack a defiant female, she being ravenous with hunger and ready to die for her cubs.

SYMPATHETIC KIPLING.

How He Cheered the Spirits of a Sick Elephant.

A writer in the San Francisco Argonaut tells the following anecdote as coming from the lips of an American traveler who spent some time in the company of Rudyard Kipling in London lately:

One afternoon we went together to the Zoo, and while strolling about our ears were assailed by the most melancholy sound I have ever heard, a complaining, fretting, lamenting sound proceeding from the elephant house.

"What's the matter in there?" asked Mr. Kipling of the keeper.

"A sick elephant, sir; he cries all the time; we don't know what to do with him," was the answer.

Mr. Kipling hurried away from me in the direction of the lament, which was growing louder and more painful. I followed and saw him go up close to the cage, where stood an elephant with sadly drooped ears and trunk. He was crying actual tears at the same time that he mourned his lot most audibly. In another moment Mr. Kipling was right up to the bars, and I heard him speak to the sick beast in a language that may have been elephantese, but certainly was not English. Instantly the whining stopped, the ears were lifted, the monster turned his sleepy little suffering eyes upon his visitor and put out his trunk. Mr. Kipling began to caress it, still speaking in the same soothing tone, and in words unintelligible to me at least. After a few minutes the beast began to answer in a much lowered tone of voice, and evidently recounted his woes. Possibly elephants, when "enjoying poor health," like to confide their symptoms to sympathizing listeners as much as do some human invalids. Certain it was that Mr. Kipling and that elephant carried on a conversation, with the result that the elephant found his spirits much cheered and improved. The whine went out of his voice, he forgot that he was much to be pitied, he began to exchange experiences with his friend, and he was quite unconscious, as was Mr. Kipling, of the amused and interested crowd collecting about the cage. At last, with a start, Mr. Kipling found himself and his elephant the observed of all observers, and beat a hasty retreat, leaving behind him a very different creature from the one he had found.

"Doesn't that beat anything you ever saw?" ejaculated a compatriot of mine as the elephant trumpeted a loud and cheerful good-by to the back of his vanishing visitor, and I agreed with him that it did.

"What language were you talking to that elephant?" I asked when I overtook my friend.

"Language? What do you mean?" he answered with a laugh.

"Are you a Mowgli," I persisted, "and can you talk to all those beasts in their own tongues?" but he only smiled in reply.

Cold Water as a Stimulant.

According to a high authority, cold water is a valuable stimulant to many if not all people. Its action on the heart is more stimulating than brandy. His own experience is that sipping half a wine glass of cold water will raise his pulse from 76 to over 100.

Many people are like the boy who cries longer over a piece of work than it would take to do it.

BLENDING OF STYLES.

RIGS TO EASE THE TRANSITION FROM FALL TO WINTER.

Street Gowns, the Accessories of Which Are Concessions to Spring Weather in Autumn—Beautiful Array of Wraps Now Offered the Ladies.

New York correspondence:

RUNNING early fall and winter styles together, so that they shall blend one into the other, rather than be separated by a distinct change, is now a matter that yearly has the attention of stylish dressmakers. Succeeding seasons have shown these designers that November and December are months in which to look for ugly tricks from the weather. The wiser women have accepted them as a feature of the season, and the result has been some special designs to overcome the difficulties thus presented. Cloth gowns are made up with accessories of lawn or light silk about the collar, as a concession to the actual warmth and springy quality of the weather, while a judicious trimming of fur marks the gown as not a left-over from spring fashions, but as planned for a warm fall. A gown, for instance, of rifle green broadcloth is made with a dainty dicky and collar of folded lawn, and is trimmed with squares of seal appliqued on the cloth. In the same manner, which is shown in the initial picture, a gown of gray cloth was trimmed with scrolls of gray Persian lamb. A cloth dress in color and weight as well suited to May as to the sort of November just passed, takes bands of chinchilla, and so on. These suits seem rather freakish in design, but they are worn by swagger folk, so who is to say them nay?

Many of these same women deem it foolish and unsuitable to wear a spring jacket as late in the year as this, and yet impossible to wear winter covering. They put themselves into gowns of very heavy wool, cut snug about the neck, and not too closely following the figure, with coat tails at the back of the bodice or some other such variation to differentiate it from a house dress. The second of these pictures shows such a dress. It was blue serge trimmed with bands of Persian lamb overlaid with lace, surely a carefully planned concession to all seasons. Next to this is another gown whose wearer will be as warm as if bundled in a fur cloak, yet it was planned to look as if without overcovering, and so meet the extraordinary demands. It was made of blue velvet. A shield front yoke piece was added of "close cropped seal"—a new thing this season, which probably never saw a seal's back. This was dotted with tiny knots of chenille. The skirt under the velvet overdress was also of the seal. Such a rig is very beautiful, and yet in its effect of no overgarment adheres to the demands of autumn, while being ready for any sudden change to winter.

Gowns of this kind are usually planned with a round waist because thus they will go readily under the fur coat or heavy jacket of the colder season. Now that the hips must be so closely fitted it will no do to have two sets of hip skirts, those o bodice and cloak, too. In consequence many of the heavy cloth and velvet gowns now made with pretty, summery looking yokes of mull, lawn and chiffon will make a later appearance with fronts of fur, velvet or embroidered cloth. Have you noticed the clever little collars and lapels of fur that are often set alongside a really summery front or yoke? The last of these three gowns showed this trick. Of gray velvet it was trimmed at the bodice with bands of white satin embroidered in black, a little collar of chinchilla topped the neck folds of satin, and a pair of white satin covers were faced with fur. This was the only touch of fur or of winter about the dress.

While dressmakers and their most valued patrons have been wrestling with the problems gowns of this sort present, the finest array of wraps that have been offered to women for many seasons has been in waiting. It would take an oldest inhabitant to recall when so great a variety of tasteful outer garments was shown in the fashionable list. In the shops are both coats and capes, each in several sorts, each sort marked as this season's by unmistakable but pleasing characteristics. That is saying a great deal, when it is remembered that out-and-out new styles are very likely for a while to seem awkward or ugly. Ever since fall began the variety has been increasing. Three of the latest additions are shown here. First is the broadcloth cape mantel, which is especially suited to women who rush into a wrap as soon as there is a hint of cold weather. This garment adds little warmth, yet drapes the figure. All mantles and cloaks, for whatever purpose, show the draped shoulders and shawl point effect that is now regarded as becoming. A flounce sloping off the shoulders and dipping to a point at the hem, front and back, lends character to an otherwise perfectly plain long cape. These flounces are round—that is, have the effect of being cut out of the whole piece and shaped to their use. In broadcloth stitched, and in a dark color or one of the conventional drab tones, such a cloak is suitable for the simplest use; while the same model carried out in beautiful materials with lace or fur for the flounce is quite right for elegant occasion.

In a general sense, coats are newer than capes, for at the beginning of the season matters seemed in readiness for a cape winter. Coats have been coming along rapidly, however, since they put in an appearance, and some of the half-length ones are intended to give street finish without too much warmth. They are of silk, fitting the hips closely, and are made princess, with the inevitable cascade frill finish. The frill may be edged with fur, just to prove the garment planned for the present season. The rage for white in unexpected combination with dark colors bursts forth in these coats, one that was an example being blue velvet finished by a cascade frill of white liberty silk edged with mink-tail fur. Women who appreciate the advantage of having a costume that shows a suitable skirt and cloak or coat for the street, and which can present a proper appearance for the interior by the removal of the coat, are as clever in adapting such costumes for winter purposes as they are in making outing rigs of the shirt waist and jacket variety. They will appreciate the costume of which the coat shown was part. It was a black satin gown made with black satin half-long coat embroidered with chenille, the cascade flounce of gray liberty silk heavily edged with black chenille. Though the coat fitted quite closely it came off to show an under bodice of black satin covered with chenille embroidery and set on a long pointed yoke of gray silk. With a dressy toque of folded violet felt trimmed with a big white pompon, this costume was charming for street or matinee, according as the coat is open or off.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Deductions for Holidays.

Here is what the supreme court of Michigan said in the case of School District vs. Gage, 39 Mich.: "In regard to deductions for holidays, we are of the opinion that school management should always conform to the decent usages which recognize the propriety of not omitting to hold public exercises on recognized holidays, and that it is not lawful to impose forfeitures or deductions for such proper suspension of labor. School should conform to what may fairly be expected of all institutions in civilized communities. All contracts for teaching during the periods mentioned must be construed of necessity as such to such days of vacation, and public policy as well as usage requires that there should be no penalty laid upon such observance."

Beautify the Schoolroom.

What are you doing to beautify your school room and make it more comfortable? See that the walls and floors are clean. Put up some attractive pictures—many of them if you can get them. Put up a few at any rate. If you don't have them, or feel that you can't afford to buy them, ask your patrons to lend you a few, or cut some illustrated papers, and surround them with frames of leaves or evergreens. Have pictures and mottoes to make the room attractive, and it will help you in the discipline.—Educational News.

Dartmouth College.

Dartmouth college is 128 years old. It has seen years of trial and years of prosperity, yet it has moved steadily in its course. From 1790 to 1800 Dartmouth graduated larger classes than Harvard, Yale, or Princeton. It reached its highest number of graduates in the class of 1842 under the administration of the famous President Lord. This was the largest purely classical class ever graduated from the college.

Obeying the Teacher.

A gentleman going into his stable one day found his little son astride of one of the horses, with a slate and pencil in his hand. "Why, Harry," he exclaimed, "what are you doing?" "Writing a composition," was the reply. "Well, why don't you write it in the library?" asked the father. "Because," answered the little fellow, "the teacher told me to write a composition on a horse."

No Standing Still.

Of course every teacher will do better work this winter than he has ever done before. If not, let him quit teaching. There is no such thing as standing still in these days of professional teaching. The teacher who does not press forward to better work can only fall backward till he drops out.

Not Worth Mentioning.

"Good-by, professor," said the sweet girl graduate. "I shall always remember you kindly, for to you I am indebted for all I know."

"Say no more," replied the professor. "Say no more. Such a trifle is not worthy of a thought, I assure you."

His Rise.

There was a man who started out
 To elevate the human race,
To clear old heresies away
 And make the world a better place.
He delved in ancient, musty tomes,
 He often burned the midnight oil,
And labored, that this busy world
 Might be the better for his toil.

He wrote in verse and otherwise
 The lessons that he had to teach,
But no one bought his books nor would
 The people listen to him preach.
For years he sought to make the world
 A better and a fairer place—
To clear old ignorance away
 And elevate the human race.

At last half starved and in despair,
 He put his books and pen away.
And lo! that which he strove to do
 He does with simple ease to-day;
He elevates the human race—

Aluminum Theater Curtain.

To satisfy the demands of the committee of safety in theaters of the city of Paris the managers of the Paris Grand Opera House had a new metallic curtain put into their house. This curtain, which is to protect the audience in case of fire on the stage, is made of aluminum. It is fifty-six feet wide by fifty-two feet high, representing a surface of almost 3,000 square feet. This curtain is put together in sheets, each plate being 13 feet long, 39 inches wide and one-tenth of an inch thick. The total weight of the curtain will not exceed 4,000 pounds; had iron or steel been used instead of aluminum the curtain could not have weighed less than 11,000 pounds. It was constructed by M. Charpentier at Valdoie, near Belfort, France.

Didn't Appreciate the Ridiculous.

Little Robbie was entertaining Mr. Geezeley while Miss Fripperson was upstairs adjusting her back hair and giving her face a few final dabs with the powder puff.

"My sister says you ain't got no idea of humor," said Robbie.

"Indeed!" Mr. Geezeley returned. "When did she say that?"

"Jist after you was here the last time. She said she seen you lookin' at yourself in the mirror several times, and you never laughed wunst."—Cleveland Leader.

Hands Displaced by Machinery.

A writer declares that 500,000 men now do the work, with the aid of machinery, which needed 16,000,000 persons to do but a few years ago.

ISSUED EVERY FRIDAY.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.,

FRIDAY, JANUARY 27.....1899

According to the Philadelphia Inquirer the rapidly increasing wealth of the East has developed a "very difficult situation to meet, and the remedy is not visible." This difficult situation is that capital has become superabundant, investments are scarce, interest rates are falling, and, as the Inquirer says, many people who have been living in comfort on their incomes when their capital yielded 6 or 7 per cent are now seriously embasassed by the decrease to 4 per cent or less. Such is the difficulty for which Eastern experts can see no remedy. The Inquirer says hopelessly: "We may go into the ocean carrying trade and give employment to millions; we can develop Cuba and the Philippines; we may even venture into South America; but these ventures must be made slowly, and any relief that would come to the congested money market would come slowly. But evidently our financial leaders will have to branch out into other countries and seek new fields of investment, for good opportunities in the United States are evidently getting scarce."

It is one of the strangest features of this new era that so many intelligent journals in the Eastern States are repeating that sort of thing. It is a folly akin to the stupidity of gross ignorance to state that good opportunities for investment in the United States are getting scarce, and that our capitalists must go to the West Indies or the Philippines to find investment. The whole of the Greater West and vast regions of the Southern States are hardly half developed and abound with resources of every description. In California alone there are opportunities for the building of railroads, the opening of mines, the irrigation of lands and the building of factories, all of which would yield a certain profit if judiciously conducted. It is narrated that Turner, in reply to a question from an admirer of the wonderful brilliance of color in his pictures, "With what do you mix your colors?" answered, "With brains, sir." Our Eastern capitalists can profit by the answer if they are wise and enterprising. If they will mix their capital with brains they will find plenty of investments for the combination. Of course, if men wish to live idly in New York and Philadelphia, to dawdle around clubs and golf games and draw interest while doing nothing, they must content themselves with small incomes for their capital; but if they will come west and get the inspiration of western energy into them and set to work at the great task of developing the resources and diversifying the industries of the country, they will soon find plenty of opportunities. In fact, the prospect for investments anywhere on the Pacific Coast, and particularly in California, were never better than now. However difficult the situation may be for capitalists in the East, the remedy is visible if they will only look West for it.

Some surprise has been manifested in New York at the action of Mr. Richard Croker, the Tammany boss, in starting an insurance company. Mr. Croker has already launched a Democratic club, and Mr. Platt, the Republican boss, some time ago started a surety company with which he guarantees the faithful performance of political duties by appointees of the government. Under the circumstances there would not seem to be any occasion for astonishment that Mr. Croker should have gone into the insurance business. Senator Platt's surety company has been doing a land office business ever since the old gentleman took charge of the Republican party and became United States Senator. Every State and municipal official who hopes to profit by his favor, makes tracks to his surety company and takes out a policy. The corporation exists mainly upon policies issued to public officials, and all the attempts which have heretofore been made to invade its field have proved failures.

The Czar is in earnest with his general peace scheme and is pushing his international convention plan with most commendable vigor. His agents are now in all lands working up the proposition, and to this date have met with remarkable success so far as securing acquiescence in the call for the congress is concerned. But what that convocation will agree upon is wholly problematical. It will not be a far away guess, however, to forecast that it will not agree to a general disarmamant.

The proposition to revive imprisonment for debt is receiving from all the press the condemnation such a disreputable scheme deserves. We do not believe that the proposition will secure a single supported in the Legislature. The idea of any such measure becoming a law is ridiculous. Even if such a bill should pass the Governor will never approve it. Even if he did, it will not hold water for a moment in the first court contest over it.

Theodore Rooseveit has joined the number of army officers who confirm the report of General Miles that the beef furnished the troops in the West Indian campaign was foul and vile. If the contractors continue to insist that it was good they should be compelled to prove their faith by eating some of it with the green beard on.

Brave soldier, gallant commander that he is, General Nelson A. Miles was never so near and so dear to the heart of the American people as he is to-day, when, because he is battling for the rights of the American soldier, he is subjected to the filthy abuse of an agent of Chicago beef contractors, masquerading in the uniform of a Commissary-General.

Ordinance No. 64.

The Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo, State of California, Do Ordain As Follows:

SECTION 1. Every male person over the age of twenty-one and under fifty-five years of age, found in each Road District in the County of Inyo, State of California, between the first day of March, 1899, and the thirty first day of December, 1899, excepting all persons who were honorably discharged from service in the army or navy of the United States, at any time between the first day of April, in the year A. D. 1861, and the first day of September, A. D. 1865, and who have not paid the same in some other road district, must pay to the said County of Inyo, a Road Poll Tax of Two Dollars provided the same be paid before the first Monday in July, but if not paid prior to the first Monday in July then it shall be Three Dollars.

SECTION 2. Said Road Poll Tax shall be collected by the Assessor of the said County of Inyo, in the same manner that State Poll Taxes are collected, and shall be paid to the Treasurer of the said County of Inyo, and shall be placed to the credit of the several Road Districts of the said County of Inyo from which said Road Poll Tax was collected.

SECTION 3. This ordinance shall take effect and be in force from and after fifteen days from its passage, and all Ordinances and parts of ordinances of said Board in conflict herewith, are hereby repealed.

SECTION 4. This ordinance shall be published with the names of the members of said Board of Supervisors voting for and against the same, in the Inyo Independent, a newspaper published in the said County of Inyo, at least one week; said publication to be made for said time and before the expiration of said fifteen days

A. C. FREEMAN,
Chairman of the Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo, State of California.

{SEAL.}

Attest: D. J. HESSION,
Clerk of said Board of Supervisors.

The above and foregoing ordinance, No. 60, was duly passed, enacted and ordained by the Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo, State of California, at a regular meeting of said Board on the 5th day of January, 1899, by the following vote:

Ayes: N. J. Cooley, Jas. Jones, T. H. Henebry, J. J. Stewart, A. C. Freeman.

Noes: None.

Hon. Walter A. Lamar, Judge.

MONDAY, Jan. 23, 1899.

In the matter of the estate and guardianship of the Vagt minors—Final account settled and allowed, and guardian discharged.

TUESDAY, Jan. 24, 1899.

In the matter of the estate of R. C. Rieveschl—Issued letters of administration to Mrs. Rieveschl.

Methodist Church.

Services for Sunday, January 29nd, 1899:

Independence—Sunday-school at 2 in the afternoon. Evening preaching service at 7 o'clock.

All are most cordially invited to attend these meetings.

JOHN J. PARDEE, Pastor.

Eibeshutz has got in a fine stock of footwear. Take a look at it.

J. A. McKenzie and T. C. Boland were up from Lone Pine last Saturday.

Tom Williams of Round Valley is spending a couple of days in town.

Robert Love of Bishop has been spending a few days in town this week.

J. C. Roeper received another fine lot fish at the Independence Market this week.

Wind has been blowing all the week, but the weather has been warm with but very little frost nights.

Miss Simona Aguirra came down from Bodie last Monday and will remain for a short time with her parents.

Mrs. Henry Bell and her sister, Miss Lena Vagt, were down from Big Pine and spent several days in town this week.

Inyo Lodge No. 221, F. & A. M., will hold an open installation on the 18th of February, and will give a banquet at the hall of the Lodge.

A. K. Briggs and T. F. A. Connelly of Bishop were in town early in the week as witnesses for Dr. J. S. McQueen, who made final proof on his desert land claim near Bishop.

Hon. Wm. Stewart has been re-elected United States Senator from Nevada. Newlands' name was not presented. This is a splendid victory for the Silver party in Nevada.

H. C. Hamilton came up from Mountain Spring last Tuesday. He says the mill is running twelve hours a day on good ore, and the paoperty is paying well. He will return next Monday.

Dr. J. D. Blair will receive vaccine lymph to-night and will be prepared to attend to anyone requiring his services. Every child in the community should be vaccinated at once.

John Baxter received a letter early in the week from Old Coso stating that the new company operating there had made clean-up of a two weeks run of their cyanide plant, which yielded about $2,000. His own mine is looking very good and a two-foot ledge of $30 rock is well developed. There is a four-inch seam that goes into the hundreds, and hand specimens show free gold abundantly.

Vagt Minors.

In the Superior Court last Monday Heinrich Glade, guardian of the Vagt minors, filed and settled his final account of the administration of their estate, as all the minors had reached their legal majority. Some seven years ago Mr. Glade was appointed Guardian of the estate of these minors, and received an estate very heavily encumbered, but by careful and frugal management he turned the estate over to the minors in good condition and with a small encumbrance. If managed in the same way the estate will clear itself in two or three years more. This is an exception to the general rule in such cases, and the minors are to be congratulated on their good fortune in the choice of a guardian.

To The Public.

During the many years we have been doing business with you we have never made a practice of advertising fake sales. We have concluded to make some important changes in our business, and in consequence offer our entire stock at actual cost for cash. This sale will continue for ninety days and will be without reserve. This is an opportunity never before offered the people of Inyo and should be taken advantage of. At the end of the time specified we shall announce some radical changes in our business. Thanking you for the generous patronage you have accorded us and soliciting its continuance, we remain,

Yours Respectfully,
N. RHINE.

Affecting Sheep License.

On the 11th inst. Senator Cutter introduced Senate Bill No. 126 entitled, "an Act to amend Section 25 of an Act to establish a uniform system of township and county governments, approved April 1, 1897, relating to the powers of Boards of Supervisors." Paragraph 25 reads as follows:

"To license for purposes of regulation and revenue, all and every kind of business not prohibited by law, and transacted and carried on in such county, and all shows, exhibitions, and lawful games carried on therein; to fix the rates of license tax upon the same, and to provide for the collection, of the same by suit or otherwise; but no license tax upon the business of raising, grazing, pasturing or herding sheep shall exceed the sum of two cents per annum, per head, and no license tax shall be imposed for or on account of unweaned lambs; provided, that every honorably discharged soldier, sailor or marine of the United States, who is unable to obtain a living by manual labor, shall have the right to hawk, peddle and vend goods, wares or merchandise except spirituous, malt or vinous or other intoxicating liquor, without payment of any license, tax or fee whatsoever, whether municipal, county or state; and the board of supervisors shall issue such soldier, sailor or marine, without cost, a license therefor. The board may provide that any such license shall cease upon the non-payment of such tax, and any person, firm or corporation transacting or carrying on such business without such license, whenever prescribed, is guilty of a misdemeanor."

The passage of this act will have no material effect upon this county, but it is likely to cause quite a roar from Mono. It has been referred to the Committee on County Government and Township organization.

End Of Contest.

A telegram from Sacramento yesterday announced that Mr. Mack will retain his seat in the Assembly by a unanimous vote. This is the only outcome of the contest that could have reasonably been expected. There is a a strong unwritten law among the American people that the result of elections shall not be changed by a mere technical quibble of law. There was no fraud alleged in the case. Technicalities alone were relied upon to change the will of the people as expressed at the polls. An unfriendly majority in the Assembly has decided that the people's wishes shall not be stultified by trivialities. It is fortunate that this is so, as it will tend to stop any similar action in the future. Until the decision of the contest Mr. Mack was seriously handicapped in securing legislation which would be beneficial to his district. He has introduced a number of bills, notably one amending the estray law, which will be of great interest to us, and during the remainder of his term he will undoubtedly be able to secure their passage.

To Prevent Re Location

In the California Legislature now in session, a Los Angeles member has introduced an amendment to the State law approved March 27th, '97, prescribing the manner of locating mining claims, etc. The proposed amendment is an addition to the present law as follows: "9. No person or persons who, after locating any mining claim under the provisions of this act or under the provisions of any statute of the United States, or who, having heretofore located such mining claim, shall fail to perform the labor required in this act, or the labor required by the laws of the United State, and who shall permit the mining claim so located, to become subject to relocation, shall be allowed to relocate the same or to acquire any interest in or to any such claim by reason of the location thereof by another, and any relocation made by such person or persons, shall be void. Section 2. This act shall take effect and be in force from an after its passage.

The Silver Peak Mines.

John Chiatovich and S. K. Wasson returned last week from New York, where they were summoned as witnesses in the case of Blair against Hanchett. Mr. Wasson will remain in Carson until the Legislature adjourns. From Mr. Chiatovich we learn that Blair secured a judgment against Hanchett for $19,200. Part of this is for royalty due on ore extracted by Hanchett and part is for alleged damages to the mine during Hanchett's lease. Mr. Chiatovich also says that the mines are no longer in the market. About April 1st Mr. Blair, grandson of John I. Blair, will go to Silver Peak and begin work on the mines. He will personally superintend the operations. It is to be hoped that Mr. Blair will work the mines on a large scale, because then Esmeralda will show the mining world the biggest thing in a mining way that has ever been seen on the Pacific Coast.—Bulletin.

The Telescope Mine.

About two years ago Messrs. Hoskins, Woodin and Davidson became the owners of what is known as the Telescope mine, situated about three hundred feet above the Hirsch mine in Russ district. Mr. Hoskins put a force of men at work prospecting the claim and has developed a ledge two feet wide which carries ore assaying from $50 to $500 per ton, the whole vein matter averaging $75 per ton. Mr. Hoskins has made two shipments to Selby's which yielded $60 per ton and has a carload ready for shipment which will yield $75 a ton. The vein seems to get stronger as depth is attained, and it is developing into the best gold mine ever opened in the county. It will also serve to encourage prospecting in the same neighborhood.

To Whom It May Concern.

My wife, Lydia Willett, having without just cause or provocation, and without my consent, left my bed and board, I hereby give public notice to all whom it may concern that I will not be responsible for any debts she may contract.

J. C. WILLETT.

Talmage On Irrigation.

Rev. De Witt Talmage, the eminent divine, returning from a trip to California says:

"Within twenty-five years there will not be between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts 100 miles of land not reclaimed either by farmer's plough or miner's crowbar. By irrigation the waters of the rivers and the showers of the heaven in what are called the rainy seasons, will be gathered into great reservoirs and through aqueducts let down where and when the people want them. Utah is an object lesson. Some parts of the territory which were so barren that a spear of grass could not have been raised in 100 years, are now as rich as Lancaster county farms of Pennsylvania or Westchester farms of New York or Sumerset county farms of New Jersey. Experiments have proved that ten acres of ground irrigated from waters gathered in great hydrological basins, will produce as much as fifty acres from the downpour of rains as seen in our regions. We have our freshets and our droughts, but in those lands which are to be scientificalls irrigated there will be neither freshets nor droughts. Montana and Wyoming and Idaho will catch the rains of their rainy seasons and take up all the waters of their rivers in great reservoirs and water their lands whenever they will. The work has already been grandly begun by the United States government. Over 400 lakes have been officially taken possession of by the nation for the great enterprise of irrigation Rivers that have been flowing idly through these regions, doing nothing on their way to the sea, will be lassooed and corralled and penned up until such times as the farmers need them. The irrigating process by which all the arid lands between the Atlantic and Pacific are to be fertilized is no new experiment. It has been going on hundreds of years in Spain, in China, in Russia, in Egypt. About 800,000,000 of people of the earth to-day are kept alive by food raised on irrigated land. And here we have allowed to lie waste, given up to rattlesnake, bat and prairie dog, lands enough to support whole nations of industrious population. The work begun will be consummated. Here and there exceptional lands may be stubborn and refuse to yield any wheat or corn from their hard fists, but if the hoe fails to make an impression, the miner's pickax will discover the reason for it and bring up from beneath those unproductive surfaces coal and iron and lead and copper and silver and gold."

National Irrigation Works.

There is more or less talk about national irrigation of national lands. There is sound sense at the bottom of the proposal. There is no better engineering service to be had than the United States can command, and the nation has such credit that it can let great contracts at very low rates. It can enact and enforce wholesome laws in regard to the use of water. It will not attempt to make any profit from the transaction, If the State were in the position of the United States we should favor the irrigation at the expense of the State; but as the State does not own the land or water and has no organization for carrying on irrigation enterprises, we do not see the wisdom of its engaging in them. The opposition to the movement comes from the eastern states, which are opposed to bringing mose fertile land into competition with their own, The west is a unit on the subject but has not enough votes to carry the measure. It is, however, so evidently an act of wise statesmanship that the nation should deal with this subject, that in time is sure to be done. The danger is that the principal sources may all be appropriated by private individuals, as well as the best of the irrigable land, before Congress can be got to act. It is not a question which appeals strongly to the eastern Congressman. It is therefore the more necessary that we at the west should continually urge it. It would have better been done while all the mountain states were yet territories. As it stands now there are many vexing questions which are sure to arise whenever national irrigation is attempted, growing out of the dual authority of the State and nation. Should the United States, for example, undertake to carry the waters of the Colorado river onto the Colorado desert in California, we can see many perplexing questions that might arise. Where the streams are not navigable their waters are controlled by the states through which they pass. The question of eminent domain would be likely to arise in some cases. There would be rights of prior appropriators to be dealt with. Upon the whole, the quicker Congress vigorously attacks this problem, the easier will be its solution.

THE GRAPE BERRY MOTH.

A Widely Distributed Pest Which Damages the Ripening Grapes.

As grape berries become full grown and begin to ripen many of them will often be observed to be discolored, and if these be examined a burrow will be found eaten through the pulp from the discolored spot and within it a whitish larva. These injured berries begin to appear while the fruit is young and green and as it ripens they increase in number. Frequently several of these discolored and shriveled berries will be fastened together by silken threads intermixed with the excrement of the larvæ and the sticky grape juice. The appearance is not unlike that of black rot. When full grown, the larva attains a length of about one-third of an inch, and, abandoning the grape, cuts out of a grape leaf a little flap which it folds and fastens with silk, forming a little oblong case in which it changes to a chrysalis, a little slate colored moth appearing in 10 or 12 days.

Our grape berry moth is widely distributed, occurring probably wherever the grape is grown to any extent, from Canada to Florida and westward to California. It attacks all varieties, but is especially destructive to grapes with tender skins and such as grow in compact bunches. It is probably three brooded, except in its more northern range, the first brood developing on the leaves in May and June, the second brood on green grapes in July, and the third brood on ripening grapes in August and September. The early brood of this insect is so scanty that it is rarely noticed, and hence protective steps are seldom taken. Later in the season it multiplies with great rapidity, and particularly does it become numerous and destructive if grape gathering be deferred until a late period.

In a bulletin of the department of agriculture, from which these facts are learned, C. H. Marlatt, entomologist, says the use of poisons is not practicable as a remedy except against the first brood. Bagging as soon as the first grapes set is recommended, but of greater value is the prompt collection and burning of all fallen leaves in autumn, thus destroying the hibernating larvæ and also the collection and destruction of diseased fruit.

At 6 this evening Captain Norris coming on board this ship (the flagship), my Lord Hamilton, Captain Ley, Captain Wishart and Captain Trevor were standing on the quarter deck, and as Captain Norris came up Lord Hamilton asked him if he had taken any more wine or brandy. The other answered no, upon which Captain Trevor asked the price of his claret, whether he might have any at 4 li. a hogshead. Norris said he would have 6 li. or salt water, and then Captain Ley said he would rather the prizes were ashore than he would give 6 li. the hogshead; upon which Captain Norris said he was a rascal that wished his prizes ashore. The other replied he was a rascal, if he called him so, and then Captain Norris struck Captain Ley and threw him over the gun, which Mr. Hopson hearing, as he and I were in my cabin, ran out and upon inquiry found he (Norris) had hurt Captain Ley, and by the admiral's directions ordered him to be confined, upon which Captain Norris drew his sword and offered to stab Captain Ley, but Admiral Hopson, holding his hand, ordered him to be disarmed and confined in Mr. Rayney's cabin.—"Journal of Sir John Rooke."

The Flanking Movement.

No battle plans have been more generally used than the flanking movements intended to overwhelm one end of an opponent's fighting line, to the great and probably fatal weakening of the rest of his position. The Confederates used these tactics in their most successful battles of the civil war, and it is worthy of notice that their attacks which were particularly daring and successful were almost invariably made against the Federal right wing.

The troubles peculiar to that unlucky part of the northern armies began at Bull Run, and continued, east and west, for over two years. At that battle the Federal right wing made a well planned movement against the Confederate left. Both sides fought well for new troops, "Stonewall" Jackson earning his battle name by the resistance he and his men made to the attack against them, but the Federals had gained ground and were still advancing, when fresh Confederate forces fell on the regiments at the right end of their line of battle. The historical stampede that followed was an unfortunate but perfectly natural result. — "The Unlucky Right Wing," by Gilbert Tompkins, in North American Review.

RAILROAD TRAINS TO RUN SLOWER.

An Appreciative Reader.

Thomas Scott, the celebrated commentator on the Bible, published an edition of Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress" with explanatory notes. A copy of this work he benevolently presented to one of his poor parishioners. Meeting him soon after, Mr. Scott inquired whether he had read it.

"Yes, sir," was the enthusiastic reply.

"Do you think you understand it?"

"Oh, yes, sir," the parishioner answered, with the unexpected and disappointing addition, "and I hope before long I shall understand the notes.'

UNDERGROUND RAILROAD PASSENGER.

I REMEMBER that multitudes of birds were singing, buttercups and daisies were in bloom, and the misty globes of dandelions had gone to seed—for I picked some to blow away at one breath for luck. So it must have been on a June morning, in the year 185—, that I went over to play with the Sherman boys, and thereby met with a memorable adventure.

Finding the boys at leisure, a game of "I-spy"—or as we had it, perhaps by inheritance from our English ancestors, "hi-spy"—was presently arranged. We were "counted out" by our favorite formula, "Wire, brier, limber lock, six geese in a flock," and it fell to Tom's lot to blind.

Before his loud announcement of the first ten of the hundred—which he was so rapidly counting that there was but a continuous mumble between the tens—Jim, Billy and I scattered in search of hiding-places. I was at no loss to find one, for I knew every nook and corner of the premises; and as neither of the others went that way, I tiptoed up the stairs that led to the hayloft over the stable. This place afforded a good outlook to the "goal," as well as a good hiding-place.

As I waded through the hay to the darkest corner, the figure of a man started up before me, nearly taking the breath out of me, so sudden and unexpected was the apparition. He seemed no less startled than I, and when, in the dim light, I made him out to be a negro, I guessed that he was a fugitive slave before his dialect made it apparent, as he whispered, anxiously, "Say, chile, is dis yere Mars' Abum Thorne's place?"

That was the name of my father, who was a zealous abolitionist, and whose house was well known by friends of the "cause," and suspected by enemies, to be a station of the Underground Railroad, concerning whose dusky passengers, often seen by us between their mysterious coming and going, my sister and I early learned to keep our own counsel.

It struck me at once that this fugitive could scarcely have made a greater mistake than in coming to the Sherman barn. Only a little while before I had heard neighbor Sherman declare to my father that it was as clearly his duty to give up a runaway slave as to deliver a stray horse to its owner.

So I answered my interlocutor in a tone as cautious and more alarmed than his own, "No, no! It's the next house. But thee can't go there now! Sherman's folks'll see thee! Thee must lie down an' let me cover thee up with hay, an' don't stir till I come for thee after dark. I'm Abraham Thorne's boy," I said, seeing that he hesitated a little.

Thereupon he lay down, saying as he did so, "I'se willin' 'nough to rest, but I'se powerful hongry, chile."

I carefully covered him with hay, hoping there was a good chance of his being safe from further discovery, for the horses were turned out to grass, and no one was likely to visit the loft for hay.

I had barely time to smooth off the covering before Tom Sherman sang out, "One hun-derd!" and the warning, "One, two, three, look out for me!"

I stowed myself where he would be sure to find me before he could stumble on the hiding place of the negro. Tom spied the other boys, and I got a safe run to the "goal," so that he had no occasion to search the loft. Hence I felt easy concerning the man for the present, except that I was at my wit's end for means to relieve his hunger, and grew so abstracted over the problem that I attracted the attention of my companions.

"What makes you look so down in the mouth, Tommy?" Bill Sherman asked.

"Oh, nothin'," I answered, evasively; and then a happy thought struck me. "Only I'm so hungry, I b'lieve I've got to go home and get something to eat. I guess I didn't eat as much breakfast as I'd ought to this morning."

The explanation might pass with those who had not witnessed my performance, but it was not needed by my playmates, for at the suggestion of hunger, each became aware of his own pangs—it being now near 10 o'clock.

"Hurrah for something t'eat!" cried Tom. "Come on!" and he led the way to the kitchen door, where an appeal for relief was promptly responded to by good, motherly Mrs. Sherman, with a double slice of bread and butter and a doughnut for each of us.

I made a pretense of eating, not without an effort refraining from the reality, till Jim Sherman began to count and the rest of us to scatter to cover. Then I crept noiselessly up the stairs and gave all my lunch to the negro. It made me hungry to see him eat, and I felt that I was making a great sacrifice for the "cause" in which my father was so earnestly engaged.

"I wish thee'd come to our house instead of here," I whispered to the negro, as he sat up under the tent of hay, ravenously bolting the bread and butter.

"Tell ye what, honey," he answered, after a struggle to swallow a large mouthful, "from what de folks tol' me where I was stayin' yist'day, dis yere was de place, nigh as I could make out in de dim o' de mawnin'—dis yere was de place."

"Well, we can't help it now. All thee can do is to keep still till night."

Then Jim shouted warning, and I heard him coming cautiously up the stairs before my man was down and covered up again. But covered he was before Jim found me, and we rushed pell-mell for the "goal."

When the game was ended I went home, hungry enough, but quite unable to enjoy my dinner, for fear of the discovery of the runaway. I told my father of him at the first opportunity, and he was as anxious as I, as his countenance showed.

"I wouldn't have neighbor Sherman find him for anything, but thee did the best that could be done, my son, and there's nothing for it but to wait till dark."

The commendation comforted me, and I proved myself a valuable trencherman at supper.

After nightfall I stole across the fields to neighbor Sherman's, and all being quiet about the premises, I at once made my way to the loft, where I found my man just on the point of setting forth alone, so impatient was he of a longer stay in the dangerous precincts.

We had crept cautiously downstairs and around the barn, not drawing a free breath till we got it between us and the house, when we heard a team driven rapidly to the door, and voices in low, earnest conversation. Then some one ran rapidly up the stairs to the loft, and presently returned; whereupon the team was driven away in greater haste than it had come.

I did not understand it at all, and only felt sure that we had started none too soon. It was bright starlight, so we skulked along fences, which led us a roundabout way, till we came near our house, waiting among the pear-trees of the garden.

The kitchen door was open, my father standing in it, in silhouette against the candle-light, speaking in an earnest tone to two men who stood a little outside the threshold. Other figures stood at intervals around the house, very steadfast and alert, except one who seemed to be looking in our direction.

"I tell you there's no one but my own family in my house," I heard my father say.

One of the men replied, "That's all very well, Mr. Thorne, but I can't take your word for it, when there's a nigger in the case. We shall have to search the house."

Then, with a terror that seemed to melt my leg-bones and take my heart of my body, I realized that our house was beleaguered by slave hunters. The two men at the door pushed in past my father, while the others stood more alert. The man who was looking our way moved toward us as directly as if he saw us, though the negro and I, by a common impulse, crawled quickly behind the trunks of two pear-trees a few feet apart.

On he came unerringly, until he was right between us, and I made out distinctly the tall, muscular form and red-bearded face of our neighbor Sherman. I expected to see him pounce upon the crouching figure of my companion like a tiger on his prey, and wondered if a sudden attack in the rear by a 12-year-old boy could be of any avail.

He turned neither to the right nor to the left as he passed between us, nor paused as he whispered with sharp distinctness, "Go back to my barn and lay low till I tell ye!"

A few paces beyond us he turned about and passed between us again, repeating the whispered injunction, and going back to the house, took post there, loudly enjoining vigilance upon the others.

The negro crawled away in range of his tree, on his hands and knees, as stealthily as a cat, and I followed as nearly as I could in like manner, till we gained the cover of a fence, looking back from which we saw the light shining from successive windows as the searching party moved from room to room, while the figures of the besiegers were dissolved and blotted out in the gloom.

We made our way back to the Sherman place with cautious haste, now startled by a ground-nesting bird bursting up from the grass before us, now making wide detours to avoid some dim object, which proved to be a harmless cow or stump, till at last we reached the left and lay down upon the hay, with a welcome sense of security in the place which I had lately deemed so dangerous.

Then as we rested and by degrees recovered natural breathing, my companion explained in whispers the mystery of neighbor Sherman's behavior.

"'Long in the arternoon I was layin' kivered in de fodder a-wishin' mighty hard for night an' suffin' for to eat, an' I heard somebody come a-trompling up de stairs, an' he begin pokin' de fodder, an' me des nat'aly shakin' wid fear, outwel fust I knowed he hove de fodder clean off'n me. A mons'ous big, f'erce-lookin' man he was, wid a red baird—same man he was that came to we-uns ober yander, an' he holler at me, 'What you doin' here? You's a runaway nigger, dat's what you is!'

"When I try for to speak, he say, 'Don' you tell me nuffin'. I don' wan' to hear a word out 'n yo' head. You had anything to eat since you ben yere?' an' I tol' him how you done fotch me a little speck, in de mawnin', an' he went an' fotch me a heap o' whittles, an' he tol' me to lay still under de fodder outwel de dark come on' an' den go to de nex' house an' not come back yere no mo', 'cause he ain't gwine for to have no runaway niggers roun' his place. Deen he kiver me in de fodder, an' dat de las' I seen him outwil he come on we-uns ober yander. Oh, he's a mighty curious man, dat he is."

I quite agreed in his opinion of neighbor Sherman, since he was acting in so unexpected a manner.

We lay quietly for an hour before we heard a cautious step ascending the stairs, and then neighbor Sherman's guarded voice, "If there's anybody here, they can go over to Thorne's now. The coast is clear."

With that he went downstairs, and we presently followed, and went over to our house, where all was quiet after the futile search.

On the following night my father carried the fugitive to the next station northward, and we saw no more of him, but heard that he reached Canada without further adventure.

A few days later I happened to hear my father thanking neighbor Sherman very warmly for what he had done, and the response of the latter was:

"Sho! Abr'am, don't never say a word about it. I wouldn't for all the world have it get out 'at I harbored a runaway nigger. Why, they wouldn't never call on me agin to help ketch 'em."—Youth's Companion.

GUN COTTON.

Details of the Manufacture of a Violent Explosive.

The use of gun cotton in the charging of torpedoes and for other purposes has become so enormous that some account of its modern manufacture is of interest. Pure raw cotton or ordinary cotton waste, which is commonly seen in all places where machinery is used, is steeped in a solution of one part of nitric and three parts of sulphuric acid. It is the former that renders the substance explosive, the latter being used only to absorb the water, thus permitting the nitric acid to combine more readily with the cellulose of the cotton.

After being soaked several hours in the acids the cotton is removed and passed between rollers to expel from it the non-absorbed acid. The cotton is then thoroughly washed to remove any acid still remaining which would decompose the cotton if permitted to remain in it. This washing process is a long one, requiring machinery which reduces the cotton to much the same condition to which rags are reduced in a paper mill—a sort of pulp.

If it is to be used in the manufacture of powder the cotton is still further pulverized and is then thoroughly dried. If it is for use in torpedoes it is compressed into shapes that make it easy to pack into torpedo heads. The form varies greatly, sometimes being disk-shaped, sometimes cylindrical; again it is in flat squares and again in cubes. The gun cotton when not compressed is light, about the weight of an equal bulk of common batting. Terrible as it is as an explosive, a brick of it when wet may be placed upon hot coals, and as the moisture dries off the cotton flakes and burns quietly. When dry, however, it will explode with great violence if exposed to a temperature of about 320 degrees.

It is usually fired by detonation, or an intense shock, which produces a more powerful effect than heat. In the torpedo the wet cotton is detonated by the explosion of dry cotton in a tube, which is fired by a cap of fulminate of mercury, which is, in turn, fired by the impact of the torpedo against the hull of the vessel toward which it is discharged.—Chicago Record.

Spanish Wooden Bullets.

It is well known that Spanish soldiers in Cuba were poor marksmen, but great surprise has been expressed, says the Scientific American, at the remarkable lack of execution which characterized their fire at Guantanamo and Santiago, and an officer of the United States gunboat Montgomery has been able to throw some light on the matter. He visited the Maria Teresa after the destruction of Cervera's fleet in search of souvenirs. He found a large number of Mauser cartridges in groups of five ready to go into the magazines of the guns, and if the entire Spanish army and navy were equipped with that kind of ammunition both Cervera and Toral were amply justified in surrendering when they did. The cartridges consisted of a metal shell loaded with hair and a sprinkling of powder. The bullet was of neither brass nor lead, but of wood. Some army contractor had imposed on the ordnance bureau of the Spanish navy, but to what extent the wooden Mauser bullets were used will probably never be known.

Old Age Pensions in New Zealand.

New Zealand, which has prided herself for a good many years on "advanced" legislation, and which is often held up as one of the most progressive countries in the world (though a British colony), is about to inaugurate what may be called an old age pension regime.

The Legislature of the far-off colony recently passed an elaborate bill, making provision for pensions to persons in straitened circumstances who are over 65 years old. The pension amounts to but $100 a year, or about $1.75 a week, and no one who has an income of over $5 a week or property worth more than $2,700 will be entitled to it. Twenty years' residence in the colony and ten years' exemplary conduct are requisite in order to secure this state gift, which is significant, not so much for the amount as for the precedent which it embodies.—Boston Globe.

The Largest Loaves of Bread.

The largest loaves of bread baked in the world are those of France and Italy. The "pipe" bread of Italy is baked in loaves two or three feet long, while in France the loaves are made in the shape of very long rolls four or five feet in length, and in many cases even six feet. The bread of Paris is distributed almost exclusively by women, who go to the various bakehouses at 5:30 a. m. and spend about an hour polishing up the loaves. After the loaves are thoroughly cleaned of dust and grit, the "bread porter" proceeds on the round of her customers. Those who live in apartments or flats find their loaves leaning against the door.

Specific for Seasickness.

Bright red spectacles accompanied by internal doses of calomel form a new German specific against seasickness. It is deduced from Epstein's investigations on the influence of color on the blood vessels in the brain. Seasickness is due to lack of blood in the brain, while red sends blood to the brain with a rush. By looking at one point for some time through the red glasses the patient is cured radically.

A Remarkable Lake.

The most remarkable body of water in the world lies in the vicinity of the Colorado river, in southern California. In this region of ugly volcanoes, desolate wastes and slimy swamps, the strangest phenomenon of all is what the naturalists call a "lake of ink." No other description fits as well.

The strange black fluid that forms the lake bears no resemblance to water.

The pool of ink is situated about half a mile from a volcano. It is about an acre in area. The surface is coated with gray ashes from the volcanoes to the thickness of about six inches, thus concealing its real nature.

Experience has proved that the black fluid of the lake is not poisonous. It acts as a dye, and cotton goods soaked in it keep their color for months, even when exposed to the sun. They also acquire a stiffness similar to that produced by weak starch. The fluid has been analyzed, but its component parts have not been made known. As to the source of the supply of the lake, nothing definite has been ascertained. It is undoubtedly of volcanic origin, but nothing more definite is known.

This is a bad land that has never been traversed. Human beings have tried it, but they never return to tell of their experience or their discoveries.—Louisville Post.

An Italian Peasant.

The Poletti's little cottage stands in a field and is semidetached. Like many of their class in Italy, they have a great love for and pride in their home. The furniture is well polished, the tools and utensils arranged with an attempt at decoration, and all is clean and neat. It is a two roomed house. On the ground floor is the kitchen, where the boy's bed stands under the stair which leads to the upper room. Here are two large beds, one for the parents, the other for the two girls.

In the kitchen stand a walnut wood table and a sideboard of antique design, an heirloom of the mother's; a walnut chest holds the bed and table linen and another old chest the best clothes; the everyday clothes are kept in a chest up stairs. They try to add something every year to the house linen. Sometimes the mother and daughters beg the use of a little plot of ground, which they sow with flax, and the year following they spin and weave it themselves, borrowing a loom from a farmer. Their stock compares favorably with that of the better off English cottager, to say nothing of the quality of this homemade linen compared to that bought cheap at a country shop.—Fortnightly Review.

FAIRYLAND.

You need not travel to a star;
The way is easy and not far—
An hour's walk, a mile from town.
The herons of the old lagoon
Lead you along the path; for sign
Are arrowhead blossoms, frail and fine,
Beside the water; then the wood
Takes you, but only by the blood
Leaping, and by the sudden start
Of the overfull and thrilling heart,
You know you see it face to face.
The greenwood bowers a sunny space
For song sparrow tinkling, and below
July's green lap is full of snow,
Is drifted rich with white and pink,
Of bouncing bet from brink to brink;
The haunted air resounds between
With humming birds, obscure and keen,
Like burnt out stars that dart and float,
With but a last fire to the throat.
You saw but common summer flowers?
Heard but a hum that drowsed the hours?
Your blood leaped not nor shook your heart?
Ah, well, I know no other chart!
The path is for your feet as far
As that which lessens to a star.

A Greek Genius.

Diamandi, a native of Pylaros, one of the Greek islands, is a remarkable calculator. After a mere glance at a blackboard on which 30 groups of figures are written he can repeat them in any order and deal with them by any arithmetical process. It is said that he never makes an error in calculations involving billions, and he can extract square or cube roots with marvelous rapidity and accuracy. An eminent German specialist declared the other day that all these ready reckoners were idiots. This is not the case with Diamandi, who writes poetry and novels in the intervals of business and shows considerable intellectual capacity.

Effective Reflecting.

"It is so sudden!" exclaimed the fair haired girl, who had just received a proposal to merge her identity in that of a would be protector. "You must give me time to reflect."

"No, no," retorted the diplomatic young man. "One whose dazzling beauty makes a mirror ashamed of itself should never go into the reflecting business. Let this solitaire diamond do the reflecting."

And the records of the license clerk show that it was even so.—Chicago News.

NERVOUS DEPRESSION.

[A TALK WITH MRS. PINKHAM.]

A woman with the blues is a very uncomfortable person. She is illogical, unhappy and frequently hysterical.

The condition of the mind known as "the blues," nearly always, with women, results from diseased organs of generation.

It is a source of wonder that in this age of advanced medical science, any person should still believe that mere force of will and determination will overcome depressed spirits and nervousness in women. These troubles are indications of disease.

Every woman who doesn't understand her condition should write to Lynn, Mass., to Mrs. Pinkham for her advice. Her advice is thorough common sense, and is the counsel of a learned woman of great experience. Read the story of Mrs. F. S. BENNETT, Westphalia, Kansas, as told in the following letter:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I have suffered for over two years with falling, enlargement and ulceration of the womb, and this spring, being in such a weakened condition, caused me to flow for nearly six months. Some time ago, urged by friends, I wrote to you for advice. After using the treatment which you advised for a short time, that terrible flow stopped.

"I am now gaining strength and flesh, and have better health than I have had for the past ten years. I wish to say to all distressed, suffering women, do not suffer longer, when there is one so kind and willing to aid you."

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a woman's remedy for woman's ills. More than a million women have been benefited by it.

WOULD I WERE A BOY AGAIN.

Oh, would I were a boy again,
When life seemed formed of sunny years
And all the heart then knew of pain,
Was wept away in transient tears,
When every tale hope whispered then,
My fancy deemed was only truth.
Oh, would that I could know again
The happy visions of my youth.

'Tis vain to mourn that years have shown
How false these fairy visions were,
Or murmur that mine eyes have known,
The burden of a fleeting tear;
But still the heart will fondly cling
To hopes no longer prized as truth,
And memory still delights to bring
The happy visions of my youth.

UNCLE CALEB'S WILL.

"YOU MEAN that you can't put yourself out to give your mother's brother a night's lodging?" said Caleb Cheverel, bitterly.

The March wind, bearing dust and grit and bits of flying paper on its restless wings, came whistling around the corner, lifting the old man's faded comforter's ends and turning his blue nose a shade bluer still, while Mrs. Larkins, his eldest niece, stood in her doorway, filling up the aperture with her ample person in such a way as to suggest the familiar legend, "No admittance!"

Mrs. Larkins was stout and blooming and cherry-checked, dressed in substantial alpaca, with gay gold brooch and eardrops, which bespoke anything but abject poverty.

Uncle Caleb was thin and meager and shabbily dressed, with glossy seams in his overcoat and finger-ends protruding from his worn gloves like ancient rosebuds coming out of their calyx.

"I'm very sorry," said Mrs. Larkins, stiffly; "but we have but one spare room, and that is at present occupied. Of course I should be glad to do all I could for you, but——"

"I understand, I understand," said Uncle Cheverel, turning coldly away. "I'll go to my niece Jenny. I wish you a very good evening."

Mrs. Larkins closed the door with a sigh of very evident relief.

"I dare say Jenny will take care of him," she said philosophically. "Jenny has a smaller family than I have. But I don't see why he came up to London instead of staying peaceably down in Tortoise Hollow, where he belongs."

Mrs. Jenny Eldertop, Mr. Cheverel's youngest niece, had a smaller family than her sister Rebecca, but then she had a smaller income as well. She had just finished a vigorous day's cleaning when Uncle Caleb was announced.

"Oh, drat the man!" said Mrs. Eldertop, wringing her parboiled fingers out of a basin of steaming soapsuds. "What sends him here, just now of all the times in the world?"

And she went downstairs ungraciously enough to the street door, where her husband was welcoming the old stranger.

"Come in, Uncle Cheverel—come in!" said honest Will Eldertop. "We're all upside down here—we mostly are, now that the spring cleaning is going on. But there's room for you if you don't mind the children and their noise and a little smell of whitewash in the spare room."

Mrs. Eldertop's welcome was by no means so cordial. She looked, to use a common expression, "vinegar and darning needles" at the visitor, while in her inmost soul she calculated the probability of the cold boiled ham and turnips holding out for once more at supper.

"Come, Jenny, don't scowl so," said Mr. Eldertop, when Uncle Caleb had gone upstairs to wash his hands and face. "Ain't he your uncle?"

"A good for nothing old vagabond," said Mrs. Eldertop, acidly, "without a half-penny laid up ahead."

"For all that he's your guest," said her husband, "and you're bound to be civil to him. And here's his overcoat now, with a zig-zag rent in it. Just mend it while you're waiting for the kettle to boil."

"I won't!" said Mrs. Eldertop.

"All right," retorted her lord and master. "Then I'll take it next door to Alexia Allen to mend."

Now, Miss Allen, the tailoress, who lived in the adjoining house, was pretty and buxom to look upon, and Mrs. Eldertop had nursed comfortably a jealousy of her for the last four years.

"You'll do no such thing," said Jenny, tartly. "Hand it here."

And she threaded a needle with a black silk and thrust her finger into a thimble, very much as a determined crusader of old might have donned sword and shield for some encounter with the Moslem.

"What's that?" said Mr. Eldertop; for a folded paper fell from the pocket of the garment as his wife turned it upside down.

"Some tomfoolery or the other," answered Mrs. Jenny, brusquely.

"I fancy you're mistaken," said Mr. Eldertop. "It's the rough draft of a will."

"But he's got nothing to leave," shrieked Mrs. Eldertop.

"I'm not so certain of that," retorted Will. "Just look here, Jenny! 'I give and bequeath to my two beloved nieces, in equally divided parts, the sum of £10,000 pounds, at present invested in consols, and——"

"Go on!" said Mrs. Eldertop, breathlessly. "Read the rest."

"There is no rest," said her husband. "That's the end of the paper. It's only a rough draft, I tell you. And now, what's your opinion of Uncle Cheverel's fortunes?"

"He's been a miser all along," said Mrs. Eldertop, her face growing radiant. "Making up poor mouths and traveling around the country with all this money in the funds. A regular old character—just like those one reads about in novels. Put it back, Will—put it back. We've no business to be prying into Uncle Caleb's secrets; but what a blessing it is he came here, instead of stopping at Rebecca Larkins'."

And when Uncle Caleb Cheverel came downstairs he was surprised at the sweet smiles with which his niece Jenny welcomed him.

"Been mending my coat, eh?" said Uncle Cheverel. "Thank'ee kindly, Jenny. I caught it on a nail yesterday, and I was calculating to sew it up myself, when I could borrer a needle and thread."

"I'm glad to be of use, Uncle Caleb," beamed Mrs. Eldertop. "Johnny, put on your cap and run to the grocer's for a smoked mackerel for your uncle's breakfast. I hope you found your room comfortable, Uncle Caleb?"

Before she slept that night Mrs. Eldertop put on her bonnet and shawl and ran round to the Larkins' mansion to impart her wonderful tidings to Sister Rebecca.

"You don't say so!" cried out the astonished matron.

"Gospel truth!" said Mrs. Eldertop. "I saw it with my own eyes."

"He must come here," said Mrs. Larkins, resolutely.

"Not if I know it," said Mrs. Eldertop. "He's my guest, and my guest he shall remain."

"But if I'm to share equally with you," said Mrs. Larkins, "I ought to show him some attention, the dear, generous-hearted old man!"

"Lest he should alter his will," shrewdly remarked Sister Jenny. "You always were a worldly creature, Becky!"

"No more than yourself!" said Mrs. Larkins, bristling up. "But it's my family I am thinking of, Jenny. I'll tell you what—I'll come round and see him to-morrow."

"But don't you breathe a syllable about the will," said Mrs. Eldertop, in a mysterious whisper.

"Oh, not for worlds!" said Mrs. Larkins, fervently.

During the next week Uncle Cheverel was overwhelmed with civilities. On Thursday a new suit of clothes arrived, with Mrs. Larkins' best love and compliments. On Friday Mrs. Larkins came with an open barouche to take dear Uncle Caleb for a drive in the park. And on Saturday Mrs. Eldertop burst into tears and declared she should never be happy again if her mother's only brother didn't pledge himself then and there to make his future home with herself and Will.

Uncle Caleb looked a little puzzled.

"Well," said he, "if you really make a point of it—but I was intending to meet Cousin John at Gravesend."

"Dear uncle, promise me to stay here always," cried Mrs. Eldertop, hysterically.

"Just as you say, Niece Jenny," assented the old man, complacently.

Mrs. Eldertop felt that she had carried her point.

But when Mr. and Mrs. Larkins came on Sunday afternoon to press a similar petition Uncle Caleb opened his eyes.

"My importance seems to have 'gone up' in the market," he observed, quaintly. "I never was in such demand among my relatives before. But I can't be in two places at once' that's plain."

And he decided to remain with Mrs. Eldertop, greatly to the indignation of the Larkins family, who did not hesitate to hint boldly at unfair advantages and undue impartiality.

But just as Mrs. Larkins was rising to depart, with her handkerchief to her eyes, little Johnny Eldertop came clamoring for a piece of paper to cut a kite tail from.

"Go along," said Mrs. Eldertop, impatiently.

"We've got no paper here. Go to Amelia."

"Hold on, little chap—hold on!" said Uncle Caleb, fumbling in his overcoat pocket—he had been just about starting out for a walk when the Larkins party arrived—"here's a bit as is of no use to nobody."

And he produced the "rough draft" and bestowed it on Johnny.

"One side's written on," said he, "and t'other ain't. It was lying on the floor in Mr. Watkns' law office, when I stepped in to see if Joseph Hall was employed there as porter still. An old chum of mine Hall was in Tortoise Hollow. I can't bear to see even a bit of paper wasted, so I axed the clerk if it was of any use. He said no—it was only a draft of Dr. Falcon's will. Dr. Falcon made a new will every six months, he said, so I jest picked it up and put it in my pocket. Everything comes in use once in seven years, they say, and this is just right for little Johnny's kite tail."

Mrs. Larkins looked at Mrs. Eldertop. Mr. Eldertop stared into the spectacled eyes of Mr. Larkins.

Uncle Caleb chuckled benevolently as little Johnny skipped away with the piece of paper which had been freighted with such a wealth of anticipation.

So Uncle Caleb Cheverel went to Gravesend, where Cousin John was as poor and as warm-hearted as himself, and he was never invited to return to London again.

Five years later Uncle Caleb departed this life and left behind him £20,000 in consols—willed to John Clark. To his "dear nieces," Jane Eldertop and Rebecca Larkins, he left £5 each to pay for the trouble he put them to when he visited them. To say that there was joy in the nieces' households when the will was read would be to say what is false, for if the old man could have guessed at all the unkind things that would be uttered regarding him I doubt if he would have left them even £5 each.—Chicago Times-Herald.

THE GOSPEL OF GRACE

EXPOUNDED BY OUR RELIGIOUS EDITOR.

Words of Wisdom, and Thoughts Worth Pondering Upon Spiritual and Moral Subjects—Gathered from the Religious and Secular Press.

GOD is infinite, and truth is, like the ocean, greater than the tiny buckets with which we children playing on the seashore try to inclose it. Experience of life and of our weakness and blindness is the best antidote to bigotry and narrowness. When we begin life we are filled with joy at our conquests in the realm of truth, and, with all the infallibility of youth, we boast that we know everything. But when we have come later to see with what a black circle of ignorance our little field of knowledge is surrounded we are apt to complain that we know nothing. Later on we survey with complacency the fruit of our intellectual labors, and we exclaim that after all we know something. Finally, we are content to admit with gratitude that we know enough to enable us to do our duty in this world, and to shape our course for the next, but not enough to justify us in dictating to our neighbors, or insisting that they shall think, confess and worship as we do, because we have learned in the school of life, which is one department of the school of the Holy Spirit, that we have enough to do in cultivating our little patch of ground without instructing our neighbor how to care for his. God guides us all, but He guides no two alike, and it is because of this that not only the Sabbath, but also religion in all its modes, was made for man, as man himself was made for God.

The Grace of Cheerfulness.

In this age of hurry and flurry and intense activity along all lines of occupation, as a people we oftentimes are untrue to ourselves and forgetful of our God by neglecting to be cheerful and friendly one toward another. Nothing tends to promote happiness in all departments of life more than a kind and friendly spirit. Too often persons beginning in life to make a name and reputation in the world make a sad mistake by being so engrossed with the affairs of their business and their self-interests that they become cheerless, cold and indifferent to everything and everybody about them. And while such persons are oftentimes successful in life, as a rule their lives are miserable failures. Who does not admire the hearty, friendly handclasp of another; who will resent the sweet smile of friendliness of a neighbor; who will regret the cheerfulness of his own actions? To be cheerful is to be Christlike, and, like Christ Himself, who was always cheerful and loving and kind, so this grace gives to life a charm which cannot be taken away. Cheerfulness means kindness, for we can be cheerful only when we are kind.

Loving Service.

A lady was walking homeward from a shopping excursion, carrying two or three packages in her hand, while by her side walked her little boy. The child was weary; the little feet began to lag, and soon a wailing cry arose.

"I'm too tired! I want somebody to let me wide home!"

The mother looked about her, but there was no street car going in her direction. She took one of the parcels and gave it to the child.

"Mamma is tired, too, and Willie must help her to get home. She is glad she has such a brave little man to take care of her and help her to carry the bundles."

Instantly the little fellow straightened, his step quickened and he reached for the offered parcel, saying stoutly:

"I'll tarry 'em all, mamma."

It was only the old, old lesson that our Father is always teaching us: "Is the homeward way weary? Try to lighten another's burden and the loving service shall smooth thine own path."—Ram's Horn.

Success and Failure.

The man who never failed is a myth. Such a one never lived, and is never likely to. All success is a series of efforts, in which, when closely viewed, are seen more or less failures. The mountain is apt to overthrow the hill; but the hill is reality, nevertheless. If you fail now and then, do not be discouraged. Bear in mind that it is only the past experience of every successful man, and the most successful men often have the most failures.

Little Things.

To do little things from the greatest motives and see in the smallest objects the greatest relations is the great means of perfecting in oneself the feeling and the intellectual man.

Occasions Unveil Heroes.

Great occasions do not make heroes or cowards; they simply unveil them to the eyes of men. Silently and imperceptibly, as we wake or sleep, we grow and wax strong, we grow and wax weak, and at last some crisis shows us what we have become.—Canon Westcott.

Here and There.

It is stated that last year sixty-seven lottery permissions were granted to religious denominations in New Zealand.

Bishop John Doane of Albany, whose attitude upon the divorce question has brought him into prominence, never registers his last name at a hotel, where his signature is simply "John of Albany."

Rev. Samuel C. Edsall, just appointed by the house of bishops as Episcopal bishop of North Dakota, is a native of Illinois, and was at one time intended for a lawyer, being admitted to the bar from the office of his father, James K. Edsall, attorney general of the State.

Caleb T. Row, who, after a service of forty-four years, has resigned from the general management of the American Bible Society, is the greatest authority on the various editions of the Bible and their history in the United States. He owns one of the best private collections in this country.

Mrs. Anna Burley, wife of a Methodist preacher at Hainesville, N. J., filled the pulpit during her husband's absence. He was gathering cranberries at a large marsh which he owns, and Mrs. Burley preached morning and evening to large congregations, both of which were highly pleased with her efforts.

Laurent Perosi, the young Italian priest, who is counted among the musical prodigies of that country, is but 25 years old, and is the musical director of St. Marc in Venice. He has already composed three oratorios, to which form of composition he confines himself—"The Passion," "The Transfiguration" and "Resurrection."

The following summary shows the strength of the Orthodox Congregational denomination in the United States: Churches, 5,614; ministers, 5,475; communicants, 625,864; additions on examinations last year, 31,090; amount of money raised, $6,643,818; 271 churches make no report. These figures are about the same as those of the Presbyterian Church.

SHE WAS OBSTINATE.

California Widow Would Have a Road Paved with Gold.

Notwithstanding the fabulous wealth of the Klondike region it cannot boast of a road paved with gold, as can California. The Bear State has plenty of extravagant citizens, but it remained for a widow and widower of Sonoma County to commit the crowning act of folly, which furnished that locality with a public thoroughfare of the New Jerusalem style. It was a case of sheer obstinacy.

John Johnson, a widower of Bloomfield, wished to improve the road from his home to the Village of Valleyford. For this purpose he received permission from Widow Martha Jones to take rock from a hillside on her farm.

While carting the rock he noticed what seemed to be specks of gold shining in the sunlight. Scenting wealth, he sent samples to San Francisco to be assayed and learned that the stone he was building his road with was gold-bearing quartz worth from $8 to $10 a ton.

Then he sought the widow and, pointing out the fortune which seemed to be hidden in the hill, proposed to share the cost and profit of development. But the widow was coy financially as well as sentimentally. She did not believe in Johnson or his gold-mine yarn, and in the language of the Bowery "trun 'em down hard." Her permission had been given to put the rock on the road, and that was all she cared to have done with it.

Johnson was furious, but he saw his opportunity. The widow had given the rock for the road—on the road it should go even if it were worth $100 a ton. So all summer long Johnson's wagons worked until four miles of road were built, but the widow didn't weaken.—New York World.

Captain Paget Under Fire.

It was in this fight that a shrapnel shell struck the road within ten inches of the foot of the British naval attache, Capt. Paget, and lifted five Wisconsin volunteers off their feet and knocked them down. For a moment Paget was lost to view in a cloud of dust and smoke, from which no one expected to see him reappear alive, but he strode out of it untouched, remarking in a tone of extreme annoyance: "There was a shell in the Soudan once did exactly that same thing to me." His tone seemed to suggest that there was a limit to any man's patience. A few minutes later a solitary tree beneath which he was sitting was struck by another shell which killed two and wounded three men. Paget, who had been in a dozen campaigns, took it all as a matter of course, and assisted one of the wounded men out of the range of the bullets from the side of a steep and high hill. The sight did more to popularize the Anglo-American alliance with the soldiers than could the weightiest argument of ambassadors or statesmen.—Scribner's.

He Made a Marvel of Himself.

When Don Henri, a municipal employe, was 22 years of age, he weighed 120 pounds and was seemingly on the fair way to early death from consumption. Then he started a systematic course of athletics, studied anatomy and muscular development and became accomplished in every line. He is convinced that the weakest of individuals can be made strong by judicious athletic work. From a sickly youth of 120 pounds he has built himself up to the man who measures as follows: Chest, normal, 46 inches; chest, inflated, 50; chest, deflated, 40½. Forearm, right, 14; left, 13⅞. Biceps, right, 16; left, 15¾. Triceps, right 16¼; left, 16. Waist, 32. Hips, 40. Thigh, right, 26; left, 26. Calf, right, 15¼; left, 15⅛. Neck, 17½. Height, 5 feet 7½ inches. Weight, 187 pounds. Width of shoulders, 52 inches.—Baltimore Sun.

Peasant—Five dollars for entering this estate. Tourist—But why is no warning sign put up, then? Peasant—We had one, but took it down again for while it was up no one came in.—Fliegende Blatter.

DAUGHTER'S PLACE AT HOME.

ONE of the sweetest things a girl can do is to receive friends graciously, particularly at home. In one's own house a cordial manner is peculiarly fitting. Do not stand off in the middle of the room and bow coldly and formally to the friend who has called. Walk over to meet her, give her your hand and say pleasantly that you are very glad to see her again. A daughter's part is to assist her mother on every social occasion. Apart from and more important even than her manner to a guest who drops in for an hour or a day is the manner of a daughter to her father and mother.

The father returns to his home after a wearying day at business. He is tired in body and mind. Coming back, as his latchkey turns in the home door he throws off care. He is joyous at the thought of the dear ones he will meet after hours of absence. His young daughter, in a pretty gown, with the bloom and freshness only girlhood wears, should be ready to give him the attention he loves—the kiss, the cheery word—to help her mother and the rest in letting her father see now much he is loved at home. Men give up a great deal for their families—their time, their strength, the knowledge they have gained in life's experiences. They spend everything freely for their home's sake, and the home should pay its debt in much outspoken love.

Books and Book Shelves.

Books are very susceptible to the conditions which surround them. Like human beings the temperature of the room affects them to a very serious degree. A degree of heat or dampness which we would find unpleasant or unwholesome, if long continued, will prove harmful to them and be resented. If kept near a stove or radiator, the covers will warp; if too near a window that is often open, dampness and dust will injure binding and leaves, especially in these days of open book cases. A book is the readiest of inanimate things to show neglect or appreciation. Of all things don't put your books on high shelves so you will have to climb, for in that case it is apt to go unread, but there is something worse about it. If a book has a nice binding it is sure to be ruined on a high shelf, because as the heat rises it will dry up, rot and destroy the leather. Gaslight, which gives off its sulphureted hydrogen, and the ordinary kerosene lamp are mortal enemies of all bound books which stand on high shelves. Then again the finer particles of dust rise, lodge and stick to the book, obliterating the pretty gilding.

During the winter evenings one insensibly thinks of cozy corners in which to rest and read after the toil of the day. Such a corner, with book shelves combined, is presented. The back and seat of the settee are upholstered and furnished with pillows, the ends give shelf room for one's favorite books, and the drawers are convenient for magazines, while the lamp is near and yet has a solid resting place.

Cultivate a Pretty Walk.

To be thoroughly graceful long steps and quick, short steps should be equally avoided, remarks a French woman. A stiff walk is also very ungraceful, and that is the great fault of English girls. They walk too stiffly and take too long strides. Spanish women have a very pretty walk naturally, as also have Italian country girls and all accustomed to carry weights on their heads. To exercise walking a weight on the head is a very good lesson. The French are also very graceful walkers. Study your walk, girls. Take dancing lessons to begin with and then repeat your lessons before your long toilet glass. A pretty walk is a beauty in itself, and every one who will can acquire this beauty. Do it, then, at once—now—without another day.—New York Herald.

The Libelous "They Say."

The one term, "they say," is responsible for nine-tenths of the lies which repetition and familiarity finally convert into seemingly bona-fide evidence. One usually hears an exciting bit of gossip launched forth with these words, while at the same time the speaker adroitly shields herself by declaring that, personally, she does not know it to be true. The man or woman who thus screens himself or herself is nothing short of a coward.—Woman's Home Companion.

Love-Making in Public.

Very much in the way of sad complaint has been written on the unloving ways of married couples, says the Philistine. And now I wish to vary the monotony with a small protest against too much loving on the part of the married—in public, says a writer in the Philadelphia Inquirer.

Love between man and woman being the one strictly personal thing in the universe, it seems meet that its gentle manifestations should not be accompanied by a brass band. Unmarried couples, I will admit, are often put to severe straits, and there may be good excuse for two sitting in public on a chair that was built for one. But what must we say of Mr. and Mrs. Smith, who lovey dovey on the housetops? We know they are married, and this is seeming proof that they prefer the society of each other to all the world, so it seems superfluous for Mr. Smith to softly pull his wife's ears and say ketchy, ketchy, ketchy, on the veranda when company has been invited. But really, I do not think Mr. Smith errs in this matter as much as the lady—she is the one who says at the dinner table: "My ownest-own, is oo feelin' bad all over? Poor little oofty-goofty?" They have little jokes between themselves, shy whisperings and "you knows," that mystify and put at unrest all the onlookers in Venice. It seems to me that if I loved a woman very much, and between us there was an absolute understanding, it would not be necessary to reassure each other at the opera.

Twists of two colors of velvet make a pretty foot trimming for a plain gown.

All close sleeves are made with an upper end under form, and must have a few gathers at the elbow.

Knife-plaiting and the old-time fluting, as well as graded ruffles, will be used for dress trimmings this winter.

If you are stout and your dress skirt rolls up in front and on the hips, you have fitted it too snugly around the abdomen, and made the band too tight.

Chiffon ruches should be made on the straight of the goods, using the cross-wise length. Bias ones are hard to handle and never look so well. The light colors in chiffon can be cleaned by skillful persons.

Seams down the front of the dress skirt will not be as much worn as heretofore, though a gown of striped material may be made that way if the stripes are run into Vs, keeping the angle in perfect line.

All ruffles of silk or wool should be hemmed by hand, unless stitching is a feature of the trimming on your gown. Ruffles are made once and a half in fullness for the space on which they are to be sewed, and ruches should be made twice the space if of sheer goods.

No good dressmaker has a seam down the middle of the back of the waist, neither does she have small darts about the hips to make the skirt fit smoothly; all the fullness is carried into a small space at the back. They also put a small cushion of curled hair just below the waistband in the back of the skirt, and invariably the waist and skirt are held together by means of two strong hooks and rings.

Elected Public Attorney.

The voters of West Branch, Mich., at the last election, chose Mrs. Minnie L. Abbott for the office of prosecuting attorney.

Good Manners Proclaim a Gentleman.

Good manners are a social obligation, and a young man should never make light of them nor pass them over as unworthy of notice. The extreme manners of the fop are silly and unnecessary, but the way a well-bred man deports himself is always worth a young man's closest study. Good manners mean comfort for others and the recognition of little social rights, which to pass over is to degenerate. Etiquette books cannot instill good manners. One's deportment comes from within. Few men are born without an intuitive knowledge of what is wrong or right in deportment. It is simply experience that develops the quality. To be good-mannered generally means to have consideration for women of every rank in life, and that is a quality which young men cannot possess too strongly.—Ladies' Home Journal.

When a lot of men go coon hunting, and don't catch anything, they say the dogs were no account.

CHARACTER IN HANDWRITING.

Easy Way to Make Accurate Analysis of a Person's Disposition.

For a little impromptu fun when a few friends happen to drop in ask each one to write any quotation that pops into his or her head and carefully sign name in full. Pen and ink are better than pencil, but the latter will answer in a pinch. If the writing is dark this shows a leaning towards athletics and a love for outdoor life and sports. If the letters are slender and faint the writer is reserved and rarely shows emotion or becomes confidential. Sloping letters indicate a very sensitive disposition, whereas, those that are straight up and down evince ability to face the world and throw off the "slings and arrows of outrageous fortune."

Curls and loops are out of fashion nowadays, but any inclination to ornate penmanship is a sure indication of a leaning toward the romantic and sentimental, while the least desire to shade a letter shows imagination and a tendency to idealize common things. If the some letter is formed differently by the same person this shows love of change. Long loops or endings to the letters indicate that the writer "wears his heart upon his sleeve," or, in other words, is trusting, non-secretive, and very fond of company. If the "y" has a specially long finish, this shows affectation, but if the same person is also careless about crossing the "ts," the combination is an unhappy one, as it points to fickleness in work and affectation. A curved cross to the "t," or the incurving of the first letters of a word shows an affectionate and good-natured disposition if taken separately; but if the two are indulged in by the same writer it is a sign of jealousy.

Writing that is rather small points to cleverness, quick intuitions, a liking for one's own way, brilliant intellect, and fine powers of penetration. Round, jolly, comfortable-looking letters betoken a disposition to correspond.

With these hints in mind it will be surprising to find how many caps may be found to fit ourselves and our friends.

Marvels of the Infinitely Small.

The human mind is as powerless to grasp the infinitely little as the infinitely great, says the Family Doctor. The molecules contained in a space equal in size to a pin-head are so numerous that, taking the world's population at 1,500,000,000, and assuming that each of these millions of inhabitants were to count these molecules at the rate of one a second, or 86,400 a day, no less than 1,633 years must elapse before the last molecule is reached. The tiniest object visible by the keenest human eye measures one hundred-thousandth of an inch; and yet this infinitely tiny object may contain nearly as many molecules as there are people on the earth.

If we take a cubic inch of gas and divide it into a hundred parts, each hundredth part contains from 19,000,000,000,000,000,000 to 6,000,000,000,000,000,000 molecules. To gain some conception of the vastness of these numbers, let us suppose that every man, woman and child living commences to count the molecules contained in the smaller number, at the rate of one per second, day and night; their stupendous task would not be complete until the middle of the year 2301. If they then proceed to count the larger number of molecules, the task will occupy them no less than 127,644 years, or a period equal to nearly twenty-two times the age of the earth according to Biblical chronology. And yet these molecules are all contained in the hundredth part of a cubic inch of gas. Is it not marvelous?

The Lord's Prayer Written in a Dot.

A machine has been invented which is composed of most exquisitely graduated wheels rubbing a tiny diamond point, at the end of an almost equally tiny arm, whereby one is able to write, upon glass, the whole of the Lord's prayer within a space which measures the two hundred and ninety-fourth part of an inch in length by the four hundred and fortieth part of an inch in breadth, or about the measurement of the dot over the letter "i" in common print. With this machine any one who understood operating it could write the whole 3,567,480 letters of the Bible eight times over in the space of an inch—a square inch. A specimen of this marvelous microscopic writing was enlarged by photography, and every letter and point was perfect and could be read with ease.—Saturday Evening Post.

Prima Facie Evidence.

Old things often take on new impressions under a new definition.

A certain learned judge, famous for his brogue and his wit, was asked by a juryman what was prima facie evidence. The judge replied in his broadest Hibernian:

"Supposin', me good man, you were goin' along a road an' you saw a man comin' out of a public house—an' supposin' you saw him dhrawin' the shleeve of his coat across his mouth, that's prima facie evidins that he was after havin' a dhrink."—Youth's Companion.

Perilous Feat of a Cossack.

A perilous feat was performed by a Cossack in a menagerie at Moscow. He was directed to clean the cages of some of the tame animals and sponge the brutes. By mistake he entered the cage of a savage tiger with a bucket of water and coolly proceeded to wash the animal. The tiger liked the novel sensation and quietly submitted, delightedly turning every part of its body to the Cossack.

ISSUED EVERY FRIDAY.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.,

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 3 1899

There is no reason why a proprsition should be again submitted to the people of California asking their preferences in regard to electing Senators by popular vote. Senator Braunhart's bill is good enough in its way but it merely repeats an operation that took place with satisfactory results six years ago. In 1892 the question was placed upon the Australian ballot, and 187,958 electors declared in favor of popular Senators, while only 13,342 pronounced against them. These figures probably represent the two classes which entertain strong opinions upon this subject. The 13,000 electors who desire to perpetuate the present system of choosing Senators are undoubtedly those who in some way or other profit by that process. It is incredible that any man, unless personally interested in Legistative corruption, could desire to see Senators elected by Legistures to the end. It will do no good, therefore to submit the proposition. In view of recent history it is quite probable that the minority would be somewhat reduced, since it must be that large numbers of those who formerly voted to maintain the present system have awakenened to a realization of its enormities; but for all practical purposes California may be said to be unanimous upon the subject of popular Senators. What Senator Braunhart snould do is to find some practicable method by which its theories may be carried into effect. One thing that can be done is to memorialize Congress in favor of an amendment to the Federal Constitution, which is the only way the reform can be permanently established.

The Record says. Chicago will supply Europe with 10,000 coach and 'bus horses. They are to come from different parts of Illinois and Iowa, and will be shipped at the rate af two hundred head a week. The first consignment will leave to-day for London and Liverpool. A few years ago a Chicago dealer sent over a shipload of horses and offered them on the English markets. At first he could not induce the auctioneers to allow them to be brought into the pavilion where the sales were to take place. At last the horses were placed on sale. "They won in a walk" is the way the cablegram read that was sent back to America. Since that time orders for American horses have been gradually on the increase, and now comes this latest order for 10,000. Already there are several horsemen in the city who have come across the ocean to buy and take home some of our horses. Among them are Hector Verveck of London, John Johnson of Belfast, Ireland; Gaston Roy of Paris, W. H. Lee of London, Dainty who represents Joseph Hear of London, and Remi Jonke, who comes to purchase several hundred 'bus horses to be used in Anthwerp. At the stock yards the exporters are jubilant over the big orqer. The prices paid, too, are satisfactory, ranging from $100 to $500 for the best coach horses and $100 to $250 for 'bus horses.

Strong opposition is manifesting itself in the House of Representatives to the President's policy of increasing the standing army. This is no new question in the history of nations, though it is so in the life of the United States. In the English Parliament, statesmen warned by past experience, have for centuries steadily opposed every effort to increase the standing army, and in this attitude they are upheld by the English people. In America there is the same aversion to the maintenance of large numbers of troops in time of peace. The strength of the nation is with the people, and history shows that when the occasion demands, there is ample material in the body of American civilians for the very best soldiers. On call a million men can take the field in defense of the national flag and national honor, and a policy that necessitates the creation of a standing army meets the disapproval of the people. There is a prejudice against surrendering any of the territory gained in the late war, but if its retention is to be made an excuse for increasing the army, that prejudice will be speedily dissipated. America will hardly consent to an entering wedge that may in time open up the way for military government.

Some of our contemporaries are going into spasms because it is proposed to make an appropriation to pay the coyote scalp claims. Those claims ought to be paid where bona fide. The State of California can never afford to plead the baby act; cannot get out of the result of one of her own acts by saying she "did not know it was loaded." If this State said to one of her citizens that she would pap $5 each for scalps, and too many came in, she should not try to wiggle out of it.

The grand old party—to be written with small letters now—is making a noble record for itself in Sacramento these days, Charges of bribery and corruption are the order, and it is a lucky man who is not viewed with suspicion in this senatorial muddle. And even Cosper, the head of the investigating committee, must need now call in his co-investigators to investigate himself.

The war revenue stamp has brought joy to one man at least, and an Ohioan at that. He forged a check, and the Judge who tried the case declared the man not guilty because the revenue stamp had not been affixed.

When California sends people to jail for debt the necessity for enlargement of the jails will be manifest. Would it not be wiser to send the creditors to the asylum?

BREVITIES

PERSONAL CHATS.

The first syllables of the names De Lome and Weyler form the name Dewey.

Thomas B. Reed's portrait by Sargent is said to afford more satisfaction to the speaker's enemies than to his friends.

The Scots Pictorial declares that Andrew Lang, critic and essayist, is of gypsy origin. Mrs. Carlyle, the historian's widow, boasts of a similar origin.

President Dole's itemized bill of expenses for his trip through this country amounts to $7,000, to which he has added his donation of $500 to the Maine relief fund.

The Bradley Martins in buying the late Barney Barnato's mansion in Park lane, Hyde Park, have secured the handsomest site and the ugliest building in all London.

James Barnes, son, grandson, great-grandson of distinguished naval officers, author of stirring naval stories and himself a naval reserve man, calls our navy sailors "Turret Jacks." The name will probably stick.

Edmund Burke once gave a definition of justifiable war which still remains unimpeached. It was: "The blood of men is well shed when it is shed to redeem the blood of men. The rest is vanity; the rest is crime."

The queen of Denmark is very fond of painting altar pieces. One of the most beautiful of her works is the altar piece in the church at Gjentofte, about eight miles out of Copenhagen. It represents Christ walking upon the waters.

Captain Gridley of the Olympia, Captain Coghlan of the Raleigh and Captain Wildes of the Boston, who fought together at Manilla, were classmates at the Naval academy, graduating in 1863, and Gridley and Wildes were roommates.

Professor J. M. Schaeberle has resigned his position as astronomer at the Lick observatory. The regents of the University of California have accepted the resignation, to take effect after one year, with leave of absence and salary for the year.

Pere Cotet, a well known character of the Latin quarter in Paris, has just died. He was a baker by trade, but was a constant frequenter of the Odeon under several successive directors, knew all the actors well and constantly gave them his advice.

The recent reports of an improvement in the condition of Friedrich Neitzsche, the insane German philosopher, are denied by his sister, Frau Elisabeth Forster-Neitzsche. The physicians give no ground for the slightest hope. She states that his mind is wrecked by overwork and the use of chloral in the largest doses.

THE HORSE SHOW.

There are over 30 light harness horses in training at Warren, O.

Kodras, 2:15¼, who was in retirement in 1897, will be raced in 1898.

It is reported that Azote, 2:04¾, has trotted quarters in 32 seconds this spring.

Twenty-six nominators have made the third payment in the $10,000 Charter Oak stake.

Sirock, 2:14¼, by Coronet, has taken to pacing of his own accord, is showing fast and will be raced at that gait.

Mary Beaufort, 2:23, who won a $5,000 purse at Chicago last season, will this year be in the stable of W. O. Foote.

It is said that John Conley recently drove a green colt by Ralph Wilkes a quarter to cart in 33 seconds at the Readville track.

The Eminence (Ky.) track has been much improved this year. The back stretch has been resoiled, and the entire track thoroughly worked.

Geers has in his string a full sister to Lord of the Manor, named Lady of the Manor, which he thinks will be one of the sensational green pacers of the present year.

Matt Maloney, who once trained and drove the old pacer B. B., 2:12¼, is now on the road as a cigar drummer and is offering for sale a weed called the Two Minute Trotter.

The colors of the stable of Captain Tuttle, Goshen, N. Y., are to be white with gold trimmings, and it will be insisted that all of his employees wear them on race days.—Turf, Field and Farm.

Sympathy.

"Still in the restaurant business, Fizzle?"

"No. Burned out last week."

"You don't say! Well, there's one consolation—at last you got your coffee hot!"—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Out West—Later On.

Editor—Train robbers held up a freight train? Why, how did they come to make such a mistake?

Reporter—It wasn't a mistake. Two of the cars were loaded with chainless wheels.—Up to Date.

Ordinance No. 64.

The Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo, State of California, Do Ordain As Follows:

SECTION 1. Every male person over the age of twenty-one and under fifty-five years of age, found in each Road District in the County of Inyo, State of California, between the first day of March, 1899, and the thirty first day of December, 1899, excepting all persons who were honorably discharged from service in the army or navy of the United States, at any time between the first day of April, in the year A. D. 1861, and the first day of September, A. D. 1865, and who have not paid the same in some other road district, must pay to the said County of Inyo, a Road Poll Tax of Two Dollars provided the same be paid before the first Monday in July, but if not paid prior to the first Monday in July then it shall be Three Dollars.

SECTION 2. Said Road Poll Tax shall be collected by the Assessor of the said County of Inyo, in the same manner that State Poll Taxes are collected, and shall be paid to the Treasurer of the said County of Inyo, and shall be placed to the credit of the several Road Districts of the said County of Inyo from which said Road Poll Tax was collected.

SECTION 3. This ordinance shall take effect and be in force from and after fifteen days from its passage, and all Ordinances and parts of ordinances of said Board in conflict herewith, are hereby repealed.

SECTION 4. This ordinance shall be published with the names of the members of said Board of Supervisors voting for and against the same, in the Inyo Independent, a newspaper published in the said County of Inyo, at least one week; said publication to be made for said time and before the expiration of said fifteen days.

A. C. FREEMAN,
Chairman of the Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo, State of California.

{SEAL}

Attest: D. J. HESSION,
Clerk of said Board of Supervisors.

The above and foregoing ordinance, No. 60, was duly passed, enacted and ordained by the Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo, State of California, at a regular meeting of said Board on the 5th day of January, 1899, by the following vote:

Services for Sunday, February 5th 1899:

Independence—Sunday-school at 2 in the afternoon. Evening preaching service at 7 o'clock.

All are most cordially invited to attend these meetings.

JOHN J. PARDEE, Pastor.

Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Edwards were up from Lone Pine early in the week.

The Stevens Ditch Co. has levied assessment No. 7 of ten cents per share.

Dr. J. S. McQueen goes to Lone Pine to-day where he will remain for a few days.

A social hop will be given at Mairs' tomorrow evening. A jolly time is sure to be had.

Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Eibeshutz start for San Francisco to-morrow to remain about a month.

District Attorney Dehy and Ernest Laird went to Bishop last Saturday, returning Monday.

Dr. Blair has been busy all the week vaccinating the children. It is a matter which needed instant attention.

The Celestion inhabitants will celebrate New Years next week. The devil won't have much show for a day or two.

The weather turned quite cold on Wednesday and that evening and yesterday there was a light fall of snow in the mountains. To-day is clear and bright.

An auction sale of wares and merchandise of the Chenot estate was held on Saturday and Monday, good prices being realized. In fact many goods brought more than the same goods could be got for at the local stores.

Quien Sabe

A peculiar case of disappearance was reported to the authorities last week. A son of Hilario Arambula has been missing for about two weeks. When last seen he was in company with an Indian known as "Mose", who has served a term in San Quentin for robbery. Mose was arrested on suspicion of having made way with young Arambula and was examined before Judge Davidson, but no facts could be elicited which would warrant holding him for trial. It is generally supposed that Mose killed the missing man in a drunken row and hid the body.

Beautiful Specimens.

During the past few days A. W. Eibeshutz has purchased from Mazourka Canyon miners one and one-third pounds of gold dust, which was taken out in about three days. The gold averages much coarser than usual, owing to the wet weather making dry-washing difficult. Quite a number of nuggets weighed from ten to twenty dollars each and are beautiful specimens Mr. Eibeshutz will take the gold to San Francisco tomorrow and place it on exhibition at Shreve's, where it is certain to attract much attention. Upwards of a quarter of a million has been taken out of Mazourka since its discovery a few years ago, all by the dry washing-process. It is a certainty that many millions are still left, as the ground has been barely touched. If the district was situated at the North Pole capitalists would be breaking their necks to develop it.

To The Public.

During the many years we have been doing business with you we have never made a practice of advertising fake sales. We have concluded to make one important changes in our business, and in consequence offer our entire stock at actual cost for cash. This sale will continue for ninety days and will be without reserve. This is an opportunity never before offered the people of Inyo and should be taken advantage of. At the end of the time specified we shall announce some radical changes in our business. Thanking you for the generous patronage you have accorded us and soliciting its continuance, we remain,

Yours Respectfully,
N. RHINE.

To Whom It May Concern.

My wife, Lydia Willett, having without just cause or provocation, and without my consent, left my bed and board, I hereby give public notice to all whom it may concern that I will not be responsible for any debts she may contract.

QUARANTINE LAWS.

RESTRICTIONS ON OUR CATTLE SHIPPERS WHICH SHOULD BE REMOVED.

On January 1st quarantine laws went into effect which materially effect the shipment of cattle from the Valley. By an order of the Secretary of Agriculture the federal quarantine line has been extended to embrace the entire State of California, and the railroads have been compelled to comply with the following shipping regulations.

1. All that country lying south, or below, a line beginning at the northwest corner of the State of California; thence east, south, and southeasterly along the boundary line of said State of California to the southeastern corner of said State; thence southerly along the western boundary line of Arizona to the southwest corner of Arizona; thence along the southern boundary lines of Arizona and New Mexico to the southeastern corner of New Mexico; thence northerly along the eastern boundary of New Mexico to the southern line of the State of Colorado; thence along the southern boundary lines of Colorado and Kansas to the southeastern corner of Kansas; thence southerly along the western boundary line of Missouri to the southwestern corner of Missouri; thence easterly along the southern boundary line of Missouri the western boundary line of Dunklin County; thence southerly along the said western boundary to the southwestern corner of Dunklin County; thence easterly along the southern boundary line of Missouri to the Mississippi River; thence northerly along the Mississippi river to the northern boundary line of Tennessee at the northwest corner of Lake County; thence easterly along said boundary line to the northeast corner of Henry County; thence in a northerly direction along the boundary of Tennessee to the northwest corner of Stewart County; thence in an easterly direction along the northern boundary of Tennessee to the southwestern corner of Virginia; thence northeasterly along the western boundary line of Virginia to the northernmost point of Virginia; thence southerly along the eastern boundary line of Virginia to the northeast corner of Virginia; where it joins the southeastern corner of Maryland, at the Atlantic Ocean.

2. Whenever any State or Territory located above or below said quarantine line, as above designated, shall duly establish a different quarantine line, and obtain the necessary legislation to enforce said last-mentioned line and the measures taken to enforce it are satisfactory to the Secretary of Agriculture, he may, by a special order, temporarily adopt said State or Terrorial line.

Said adoption will apply only to that portion of said line specified, and may cease at any time the Secretary may deem it best for the interest involved, and in no instance shall said modification exist longer than the time specified in said special order; and at the expiration of such time said quarantine line shall revert without further order to the line first above described.

Whenever any State or Territory shall establish a line for above purposes, differently located from the above described line, and shall obtain by legislation the necessary laws to enforce the same completely and strictly, and shall desire a modification of the Federal quarantine line to agree with such State or Territorial line, the proper authorities of such State or Territory shall forward to the Secretary of Agriculture a true map or description of such line and a copy of the laws for enforcement of the same, duly authenticated and certified.

3. From the 1st day of January, 1899, no cattle are to be transported from said area south or below said Federal quarantine line above described to any portion of the United States above, north, east, or west of the above-described line, except as hereinafter provided.

4. Cattle from said area may be transported, by rail or boat, for immediate slaughter, and when so transported the following regulations must be observed:

(a) When any cattle in course of transportation from said area are unloaded above, north, east, or west of this line to be fed or watered, the places where said cattle are to be fed or watered shall be set apart, and no other cattle shall be admitted thereto.

(d) On unloading said cattle at their points of destination, pens, sufficiently isolated, shall be set apart to receive them, and no other cattle shall be admitted to said pens; and the regulations relating to the movement of cattle from said area, prescribed by the cattle sanitary officers of the State where unloaded, shall be carefully observed. The cars or boats that have carried said stock shall be cleansed and disinfected as soon as possible after unloading and before they are again used to transport, store, or shelter animals or merchandise.

(c) All cars carrying cattle from said area shall bear placards, to be affixed by the railroad company hauling the same, stating that said cars contain Southern cattle, and each of the waybills or bills of lading of said shipments by cars or boats shall have a note on its face with a similar statement. Whenever any cattle have come from said area and shall be reshipped from any point at which they have been unloaded to other points of destination, the cars carrying said animals shall bear similar placards with like statements, and the waybills or bills of lading be so stamped. At whatever point these cattle are unloaded they must be placed in separate pens, to which no other cattle shall be admitted.

(d) No boat having on board cattle from said district shall receive on board cattle from outside of said district. Cattle from said district shall not be received on board when destined to points outside of said district where proper facilities have not been provided for transferring the said cattle from the landing to the stock-yards and slaughter-houses without passing over public highways, unless permission for such passing is first obtained from local authorities.

5. Cattle originating in said area may, after having been properly dipped, under the supervision of an inspector of this Department, be shipped without further restriction, excepting such as may be enforced by local authorities at point of destination: Provided, That application be first made to this Department, and permission granted to establish dipping stations, and that after being dipped the cattle are certified by an inspector of the U. S. Bureau of Animal Industry, and that the cattle when dipped be shipped in clean cars, and not be driven through the infected district or unloaded therein except at such point as may be duly designated by an order issued by this Department.

6. From November 1 to December 31, inclusive, cattle from said area, which are found free from infection upon inspection by officers of this Department, may be moved north of the quarantine line without restriction other than may be enforced by local regulations at destination. If evidence of infection is found upon such inspection, the cattle must be dipped in accordance with the provisions of section 5 before being moved north of the quarantine line.

It will be observed from the above that Nevada and the entire plateau region is not embraced in the quarantine district. The counties of Inyo, Mono and Alpine belong geographically to the same region, and no disease or infection exists here. It is manifestly wrong that our cattle should be charged with a disability that does not exist. The Carson and Colorado people have been using every endeavor during the past few years to build up a cattle shipping industry in this county, and have succeeded in securing the shipment of hundreds of beef cattle every year. While the regulations do not prevent the shipment of cattle for immediate slaughter, it will be observed that they must be placarded and advertised as diseased, and this cannot fail to have an injurious effect, especially so as we are in direct competition with Nevada cattle in the San Francisco markets. Mr. Mack has been asked to secure a resolution in the Assembly asking a modification of the regulations, and it is to be hoped that he will succeed. We are all directly interested in the matter and should use every effort in bringing about the desired result.

Bee Keepers' Meeting.

The seventh annual meeting of the Inyo County Bee Keepers' Association was held at Bishop on Wednesday, Jan. 25th, 1899. The Secretary called the meeting to order and in the absence of the President, W. A. Trickey was elected chairman. The minutes of the previous meeting, as well as the Secretary-Treasurer's reports were read and approved. The following motion was carried and entered in the by-laws: "Whenever a meeting of this Association is held at another town than that in or near which the Secretary resides, he shall be allowed his traveling expenses out of the funds of the Association," Fourteen members paid their annual dues. The following were elected officers for the ensuing year: President, T. F. A. Connelly, Vice-President, Ambrose Smith, Secretary-Treasurer, Wm. Muth-Rasmussen. The Secretary stated that he had been corresponding with the California Bee Keepers' Exchange in the hope of perfecting arrangements by which the bee keepers of Inyo County might find better markets and obtain more remunerative prices for their honey. He read three letters from the General Manager of the Exchange relating to this subject. F. F. A. Connelly exhibited a "super" filled with "plain" sections and fence-separators. According to his experience the "plain" sections were not a success, and he would not advise anybody to use them. A discussion followed on tin and wood separators, and it appeared that the wood separators were the most satisfactory. N. J. Cooley read a paper on grading, packing and marketing comb honey. Also letters from a firm in Omaha for whom he has been buying honey during last fall. These papers were very interesting and instructive. On account of scarcity of honey almost anything was bought up that would bear transportation; but in the future buyers will be more particular, and bee-keepers must be more conscientious about grading and more careful about packing. It was decided to adopt a uniform size of shipping case, viz., the 24-section case, with the opening in one side changed to 2 inches in width, instead of three inches as formerly. As the majority of Inyo bee-keepers live near Bishop, and it is expensive and inconvenient for them to attend meetings at Independence, it was resolved in the future to hold the annual meetings at Bishop as a rule, and occasionally at Big Pine. Semi-annual meetings may be called at Bishop at the close of the honey season to ascertain the extent of the honey crop, and to make preparations for the disposal of it. Meetings may be held at Independence during court-week or at any time when other business brings a number of bee-keepers together at that place. F. K. Andrews is perfecting arrangements for making up a carload of bee-keepers' supplies in connection with parties at Reno. The general order will be forwarded on February 10th, and individual orders should be sent to Mr. Andrews immediately. Price of shipping cases from Reno will be ascertained and made known as soon as possible. A statistical table of the names of bee owners and numbers of hives was prepared but not completed at the meeting. The meeting was very interesting throughout, and everybody felt that he had been well repaid by being in attendance. The next annual meeting will be held at Bishop, subject to the call of the Secretary.

Great Shooters of Europe.

In Europe, where the question of a game supply does not enter into consideration, killing for count is recognized as legitimate and sportsmanlike. He is considered to have made a record of honor who has bagged the largest numbers of birds or other game. Thus we read of one Trauttmansdorff — Prince Carl Trauttmansdorff—who has to his credit for a single day's shooting the slaughter of 862 head of game, with the best bag of pheasants, 303; of partridges, 632; of hares, 416; of rabbits, 638; of roebuck, 12; of fallow deer, 20, and of blackcock, 14, and a best year's count of 10,833 head of assorted game. Another record smasher is Earl de Gray, whose exploits have been duly tabulated for a series of years, from 1867 to 1895. His pheasants score was 111,119, with 89,401 partridges, 47,468 grouse, 26,747 rabbits, and as many hares, 2,735 snipe, 2,077 woodcock, 1,393 wild duck, 567 deer, 12 buffalo, 11 tigers, a couple of rhinoceroses, and 9,000 assorted, making a total of 316,699 for the entire period, or about 11,000 annually. This is a record which the most industrious market shooter in this country would needs work hard to equal. In very truth the noble sportsman must have been a monomaniac in the field. Yet for all his slaughter the game supply where he shot has not been permanently diminished.—Forest and Stream.

Aluminium as Paper.

Experiments with aluminium as a substitute for paper are now under way in France. It is well known that the paper used today in the manufacture of books is not durable.

It is now possible to roll aluminium into sheets four-thousandths of an inch in thickness, in which form it weighs less than paper. By the adoption of suitable machinery these sheets can be made even thinner still and can be used for book and writing paper. The metal will not oxidize, is practically fire and water proof, and is indestructible by the jaws of worms.

Welcoming Fresh Cares.

"As far as fresh cares are concerned," said a man of mature years, "as I grow older I rather welcome them. They blot out the old cares completely and so show how unsubstantial they were, and I know that in due course these new cares will be supplanted by others and will as completely give way to them. Thus I am constantly reminded that our cares really don't amount to much, except as we imagine them great, and I expect to see the day when I shall give but scanty room to them and not be disturbed by them at all."—New York Sun.

The Return of the Prodigal.

IT came to pass that there were born unto Ezra and Lucy Whittlesy, two boys, William and John, who grew to youth's estate on the old farm in Oakland County.

John was a home boy. His happiest days were those on which he hoed and weeded. With William it was different. He was like unto neither his mother nor his father. He was just William. He read, long into the night, by the kerosene lamp in the sitting-room, stories of adventure and of youths going forth into the world in search of fortune and of fame. He longed for a wider field. He dreamed of conquests, of piles of gold, of explorations into unknown countries, and of experiences in life such as never entered the mind of plodding John.

The days, the weeks, the months, rolled on around the spool of time, and, with each bright breaking sun, more and more discontented and dissatisfied did become the restless William. His days were centuries long. There was always shining before his eyes the star of ambition which he was of a mind to follow more than once. He detested the sorry life of the farm, with the homely environment, the old, old routine, day in, day out, and finally, after several years of uncomplaining servitude, he determined to run away.

He was 18 then, or two years he had saved every penny, every nickel, every dime, that had fallen in his way, and ere long noted that the dollars were taking care of themselves in a little company of their own. There were forty-two of them in the stone jar on the shelf at the head of his bed.

* * * * * * * *

The sun was sinking behind the western horizon on the fateful night of William's departure. There, by the little window in the store room where he slept with the peaceful, sweet-contented John, he sat on a cane-seated chair beside the bed, his forty-two dollars spread out on the quilt before him.

"I will do it!" he exclaimed to himself in the dim darkness. "I will do it—"

His thoughts were broken in upon by the cry of a woman down below, at the foot of the stairs.

"William! William! It's time to go for the milk."

"Ah, me," murmured the boy to himself, "another night has come, but it shall be the last. For many years has it been my duty to go down the dusty old road to Green's for the evening milk. I cannot see why father does not maintain a dairy, or at least one cow, of his own. But, no, I must trudge, trudge on through snow, through sunshine and through rain to that old farmhouse nearly two miles down the turnpike for milk. But this shall be my last walk——"

"William! William! ain't yew ever goin' fur that milk?"

Again the feminine voice from the foot of the stairway.

"Yes, mother, I'm comin' now."

The boy dropped all the forty-two dollars into his trousers pockets, and, after placing the stone jar back on its shelf at the head of the bed, slowly shambled down the stairs.

"There's th' pail, William," said his mother, pointing toward the table drawn up by the kitchen window.

William took it and passed out into the deepening darkness.

He was alone on the road. The stone walls on either side showed indistinctly yellow gray in the fast gathering darkness. Now and then William would stoop and pick up a stone and fling it idly toward a bush whence came the note of a nightbird crying to its mate. He stumbled once or twice and murmured something under his breath each time. As he walked down that road the whole eighteen years of his monotonous existence, called Life, unrolled themselves before his mind's eyes. He remembered the old swimming hole, the eager hunts for birds' nests in the days agone, the "stone bruise" he carried to school with him all one spring, and the beech whistles he used to make at recess. And the squirrel hunts and the games of youth, all the different scenes of his life were enacted again for him in the playhouse of his memory. And at the end he said to himself, "Well, it is over now, for to-night I shall go away. Never again will William take home the night's milk. This is my last walk."

His mind was set, determined. He stumbled along the rocky path to the milk-house on Green's farm, and stood by, silently, while the hired man filled his pail, then he trudged back over that country road. The moon was rising. Already a soft, silvery light flecked the foliage of the woods on the left, and cast shimmering shadows on the stone walls.

And William dreamed of the wealth of the Indies that would one day be his, of the fame, the glory and the great, good name that awaited him, out in the world, beyond the ken of life on the Whittlesy farm.

Suddenly the boy stopped—so suddenly, indeed, that the frothing milk slopped over the top of the pail and fell in two splashes, one on the road, the other on his trousers.

"I shall not go home. I shall leave now!" he cried.

He walked to the edge of the road and peered into the white, lighted woods. "I must hide the pail," he said, "but where?"

For a moment he stood in the shadow, thinking.

"I remember!" he exclaimed. "The old blasted tree trunk. I will put the pail there."

He walked a few rods further up the road and then sheered off into the woods. By and by he came out into the moonlight again. He had carried out the plan that had sugested itself to his mind. The milk pail had been placed in the old tree trunk.

For a moment he hesitated. He took off his cap and stood bareheaded under the sky, the rays of the moon bathing him in a flood of silver light.

"Good-by! Good-by!"

The words were spoken to the breezes and were borne to the night birds that made reply with shriller chirpings.

Then William turned and went back down the country road.

"Yes," the station agent at the crossing told him, "there will be a train along for the west in thirty minutes."

William Whittlesy had dreamed of Colorado, and 'twas there he meant to go. An hour later he was rolling on his way.

* * * * * * * *

And the years came and went.

Not a word was ever received by the Whittlesys from William. And after many months they came to regard him as dead, and no longer hoped that one day his form might again darken the kitchen door.

With William all went well. He stayed in Chicago just long enough to learn that there was nothing for him there. He pushed his way further west. He succeeded in his first venture, and five years had not elapsed before his name had come to be known throughout the mining country. Often he thought of that home back in Michigan, and frequently he said to himself, "I will write;" then something would interfere with the carrying out of his intention, and no word would be sent back. Thus the days and weeks and years sped on until a fifth of a century had passed.

William Whittlesy had accumulated one hundred thousand dollars in the twenty years he had lived and toiled in Colorado, and one day the desire came to him stronger than ever to go back to the old home and gaze once again into the old eyes of father and mother.

So he returned.

The station at the crossroads was the same, it seemed to him. It had not even been painted in all those twenty years. The agent was a stranger, and the farmers around the little depot did not recognize in the man who alighted from the train that morning the William Whittlesy who had so mysteriously disappeared years before.

Alone and unknown, the man wended his way along the country road to the old house on the hill. He had crossed the lane below the woods when he recollected that pail of milk that he had hidden in the hollow log twenty years before.

"THERE'S TH' PAIL, WILLIAM," SAID HIS MOTHER.

"I wonder if the pail can be there yet," he said to himself, and smiled at the thought. "I'll see."

He remembered the spot as distinctly as though he had but left the day before. He went to the blasted trunk, kicked away the stones and moss and twigs and looked down. Yes, it was there; but in it nothing. He lifted out the old tin pail, its sides all full of holes eaten by time and rust, and continued on up the road.

"I shall knock at the kitchen door," he said to himself; "and when mother answers I shall say: 'Here is the milk.'" And William Whittlesy laughed aloud.

The house appeared unchanged. To be sure there were honeysuckles growing up the back porch that had not been there went he went away, but twenty years is sufficient time for honeysuckles to live and die.

William Whittlesy ascended the steps quietly and knocked at the door. It was opened by a kind-eyed old lady. William thrust forward the rusty, battered pail and said, "Mother, here's the milk." The woman looked at him with wonder in her eyes. "Won't—won't—you come in?" she said.

William entered the room. It was the same old kitchen he had known when but a boy. And there by the fireplace sat a man, feeble, and wrinkled and gray. "Father, I have come back," cried William Whittlesy. The old man turned in his chair and gazed at the stranger, unknowing.

"Don't you see who I am?" cried the long-lost. "I am William. I have come back. I went away twenty years ago——"

A peculiar light came into the eyes of the woman, who, during the stranger's appeal to the old man by the fireplace, had stood still, at the end of the table with one hand on her hip.

"I—I—I—understand now," she said.

William looked his thanks in his eyes. He was about to close his arms about the old lady's face when she waved him back. "I understand," she went on. "Arter you went away your mother died, and in 'beout a year your pa married me. Then when he died I married George there, an' we've been livin' on th' ol' place ever sence. So yew see we ain't your folks arter all, though likely ez not yew may have some legal connection with us——"

William put his hand to his brow and reeled. He staggered to the door—sobbing, with his head bowed upon his breast, he walked slowly down the old country road. And that night he went back to the West.—Detroit Free Press.

AN OLD-FASHIONED REMEDY.

One Old Boy Who Was Cured by a Stick of Peppermint Candy.

They were two old boys with scanty silver locks, and they had many other things in common, memories and a host of chestnutty old stories, from which they brushed the mold whenever they met.

Their jokes also had an ancient flavor, but they never wearied of telling them. While there were a few things they acknowledged as superior to the inventions of the olden time, for the most part they bewailed the decadence of the world and human nature.

Then one of them became ill. And nothing pleased him—not even the best doctor in the country when he came to see him. He wanted old-fashioned remedies that had not been heard of in two generations, and lamented the good old practice of phlebotomy and other passed-away specifics of materia medica.

When he was at his lowest his old chum called, bringing a small, mysterious looking package, which the sick man put under his pillow.

"Where did you find it?" he asked feebly.

"In a little old-fashioned place on a back street, where some nice people have a little shop. It's the very same we used to buy when we were boys. I felt that it would cure you as soon as ever I saw it."

"I've got stacks of things I don't want," said the sick man, "but nothing that'll set me up like this," and he greedily mumbled something between his lips, not forgetting to say: "Have a bite, too. Maybe you need it as much as I do."

"I got some for myself," said the old chum, "and it took me right back to when I was a boy and——"

Here the nurse sent him away, but from that hour the sick man revived, and in a few days was up and about.

"I'd like to know what that other old chap brought him," the doctor said to the nurse.

"Nothing but some pink and white sticks of old-fashioned peppermint candy—they couldn't have helped him any," responded the nurse, looking affably over her glasses. Ah, she was too young to know.—Chicago Times-Herald.

LITERARY LITTLE BITS

Mrs. Mannington Caffyn ("Iota") has settled at Southsea, England, where she is busy on a fresh work of fiction.

The widow of Captain Mayne Reid has in the press a novel entitled "George Markham," which will be published at once in London.

The Macmillans will soon issue "The Philippine Islands and Their People," a book by Professor Dean C. Worcester of the University of Michigan. It has been written from personal observation.

George Meredith has written a new novel of modern journalism, but withholds it from publication because of its use of the personality of men now living, whom it will not do to set forth in print just as they are.

Some further adventures of the heroes of "Slaves of the Lamp" are being prepared by Rudyard Kipling. This story originally appeared in Cosmopolis, and in the continuation Mr. Kipling deals with life at an English public school.

The new novel upon which Marie Corelli was engaged when the death of her step-brother interrupted her work a short time ago, is to be a longer and more serious book than any which she has yet written. In it she has taken up questions connected with the inner workings of the Catholic Church at Rome. She has just completed contracts for its simultaneous publication in England and America.

Jean Ingelow, when a child, used to write poems on the inside of her bedroom shutters. Her mother discovered these accidentally, and some of the efforts were printed. The poet and her brothers and sisters conducted a little magazine, the type being set by their schoolmates on a private printing machine. A peculiarity of Miss Ingelow's life was that she never entered a theater. It is claimed that she could remember events from the time she was 17 months old.

According to the New York Tribune, Bret Harte's story, "Tennessee's Partner," is said to have been suggested to the author by the touching and beautiful friendship which binds together two old men who have lived more than forty years in the mountains on the route into the Yosemite. They have a little gold mine, which yields an ocasional fifty dollars, an orchard and a garden. One of the two has not seen San Francisco since 1855. With all their hermitage, however, the two old men read a great deal, and know what is going on in the outside world.

When the Weak Go to the Wall.

The Eskimos dread the winter, and take early precautions to provide against famine. As the season approaches, the great herds of reindeer migrate southward, and the walrus or the seal are all that remain to use for food.

When an in-wind is blowing the walrus is easily found on the outer edge of the ice-packs. When it is blowing off the shore, however, the ice-pack sails out to sea with the walruses on them. The natives then class their numbers in a list, from the strongest to the weakest. The food that is in store is divided up, the weakest having the smallest quantity, the strongest the largest. Thus the mightiest hunters have strength to provide for the others.

It is a cruel system, but, nevertheless, a necessary one. If all were weak, all would die; if some are strong, they will save many of the weak as well as themselves.—Saturday Evening Post.

What Girls Save.

One cigar manufacturer in Detroit who employs girls has estimated a saving in cigar consumption by employes of $20,000 in ten years, on the basis that male workers use three cigars daily.

Sailors are hard workers; they're often compelled to serve three masters.

SERMONS OF THE WEEK

Awe of God.—The greatness of God is a sufficient reason why man should stand in awe of him.—Rev. A. F. Myers, Collegiate, New York.

Patience.—Patience is the knack of getting along comfortably with all uncomfortable things and beings.—Rev. Dr. McElveen, Congregationalist, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Great Things.—The ease with which great things can be done breeds contempt for the doing of great things.—Rev. S. P. Cadman, Congregationalist, New York City.

The Simplest Believers.—From every point on earth the simplest believers are equally near to heaven and to God.—Rev. Dr. Williams, Episcopalian, New York City.

The Thoughtful.—The disputations of theologians and theology do not command the attention or hold the respect of the thoughtful.—Rev. J. L. Jones, Unitarian, Chicago, Ill.

Righteousness.—Righteousness must be founded upon the character of God as a personal being in communication with the children.—Rev. Lester Bradner, Jr., Episcopalian, New York City.

Life of Conscience.—Religion is not an opinion about righteousness; it is the practice of righteousness. Religion is the life of conscience.—Dr. Abbott, Congregationalist, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Sympathy.—It is by sympathy that men know each other; heart answers to heart; we feel the emotions of other souls when such emotions have been our own.—Rev. D. R. Bowen, Swedenborgian, San Francisco, California.

The Message of the Cross.—Paul protests against philosophizing on the message of the cross. The word of the cross was revelation of power. No one was ever saved by philosophy; no religious movement can take any hold anywhere where there is not first a revelation of sin. The different divisions of the church looked at the cross from different angles of observation.—Rev. Thomas C. Hall, Presbyterian, New York.

Golden Cords.—Our aspirations are intended to be golden cords, linking us to heaven, but when sin comes in and snaps the cord the communication ceases and our ambitions become perverted.—Rev. F. C. Harding, Congregationalist, New York City.

Natural Law.—The reign of natural law is acknowledged, but there seems to be an impression that moral law may be violated with impunity. It will be learned eventually that the consequences of breaking moral law are not to be ignored.—Rev. J. H. Beard, Methodist, San Francisco, Cal.

Belief.—There are those who belong to the church and yet are not sure whether they believe in Christ or not, and who have never definitely faced the questions that concern the soul, eternal life, sin, judgment, God.—Rev. J. B. Nies, Episcopalian, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Soldiers of Christ.—May the soldiers of Christ be as brave and self-sacrificing as the men who have followed the stars and stripes. Then the plumb-line of God dropped beside us would prove that we come near the standard.—Rev. A. C. Dixon, Baptist, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Uniting with the Church.—To-day every consideration that makes for the permanence of society asks that every patriot and citizen should formally and publicly unite with some one of the many churches of our city and country.—Rev. N. D. Hillis, Independent, Chicago, Ill.

The Catholic Church.—The Catholic Church does not even think the Bible is a book which is safe to put into the hands of the common people unless the church is by in order to give correct and safe interpretations to its teachings.—Dr. Minot Savage, Unitarian, New York City.

The Divine and the Human.—There are two natures in Christ, the divine and the human. The first is worshiped for itself alone; the second, for its unity with the divine. Surely there is no object more worthy of love than the heart of the Redeemer, and the end of this worship is the acknowledgment of the undying love of Jesus for us.—Rev. John Cottle, Roman Catholic, San Francisco, Cal.

Great Characters.—The great characters of history have been fashioned out of sorrow and tolls of adverse conditions. The greatest personal achievement of human life is character-building. It alone is imperisaable.—Rev. A. C. Smithers, Los Angeles, Cal.

Odd Signs in Japan.

Nearly every shop in Japan for the sale of foreign goods is furnished with a sign in a foreign language. No matter whether the language is intelligible—if it is only in foreign characters, that is enough. Many of these signs are a Study. "The All Countries Boot and Shoe Small or Fine Wares;" "Old Curious;" "Horseshoe Maker Instruct by French Horse Leech;" "Cut Hair Shop;" "If you want sell watch, I will buy; if you want buy watch, I will sell. Yes, sir, we will, all will. Come at my shop. Watchmaker;" "Hatter Native Country;" "Antematic of Nausear Marina," and "The House Build for the manufacture of all and best kinds of Hats and Caps."

Wonderful Friendship of Old Men.

For fifty years Christopher Hoffman and Adolph Martin had been bosom friends, and years ago they had sworn that if misfortune should overtake one the other should care for the unfortunate one. Two weeks ago Martin was turned out of his home by his wife and married daughter. He went to Hoffman's little rooms and Hoffman took him in though he had scarcely enough for himself. The two old men played pinochle in their idle hours. Finally Martin died from heart disease. He was buried from Hoffman's humble rooms.—New York World.

The Stage in Shakespeare's Time.

John Churton Collins, the distinguished essayist and Quarterly Reviewer, has been lecturing on the theater of Shakespeare's time. The typical theater then was of wood, circular or hexagonal in form, being modeled externally on the general structure of the old amphitheaters for bull and bear baiting. The interior was fashioned after the manner of an inn yard. The pit was scorched by the sun, while the actors were protected by a thatched penthouse. The scenery was supplied by the imagination of the audience, but what was lacking in scenery was made up in noise and bustle, things being kept very lively in that direction. The most numerous class among the audience were roistering prentices.

On the stage and in other parts were fashionable dandies, swashbucklers, writers and actors. These, it is interesting to know, always had a free pass. The play lasted two hours on an average, and, considering the noise and the smells which accompanied the performance, one was, Mr. Collins presumed, not sorry when "the actors dropped on their knees to pray for the queen."

The Cheetul.

The axis, or cheetul, deer of the Indian jungle can claim to be the most ornamental of all the 36 races of deer to be seen gathered together at Woburn. In the early summer, when all the other deer except the wapiti are either shedding their horns or "in the velvet," the axis are in perfection, both of color and antlers. The large herd of this species looks as if carved out of ivory and red gold in the sunshine and verdure of English scenery. Their horns are almost white, their eyes and muzzles of jet black, their throats white and their backs and sides a brilliant golden tan, spotted with round dots of purest white. It is worth a pilgrimage to Woburn to see these deer alone. They breed constantly, sometimes producing two fawns in the twelvemonth.—Spectator.

DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

A LIVING WITNESS.

Mrs. Hoffman Describes How She Wrote to Mrs. Pinkham for Advice, and Is Now Well.

DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—Before using your Vegetable Compound I was a great sufferer. I have been sick for months, was troubled with severe pain in both sides of abdomen, sore feeling in lower part of bowels, also suffered with dizziness, headache, and could not sleep. I wrote you a letter describing my case and asking your advice. You replied telling me just what to do. I followed your directions, and cannot praise your medicine enough for what it has done for me. Many thanks to you for your advice. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has cured me, and I will recommend it to my friends.—Mrs. FLORENCE R. HOFFMAN, 512 Roland St., Canton, O.

The condition described by Mrs. Hoffman will appeal to many women, yet lots of sick women struggle on with their daily tasks disregarding the urgent warnings until overtaken by actual collapse.

The present Mrs. Pinkham's experience in treating female ills is unparalleled, for years she worked side by side with Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham, and for sometimes past has had sole charge of the correspondence department of her great business, treating by letter as many as a hundred thousand ailing women during a single year.

THE AVERAGE MAN.

When it comes to a question of trusting
  Yourself to the risks of the road,
When the thing is the sharing of burdens,
  The lifting the heft of a load,
In the hour of peril or trial,
  In the hour you meet as you can,
You may safely depend on the wisdom
  And skill of the average man.

'Tis the average man and no other
  Who does his plain duty each day,
The small thing his wage is for doing,
  On the commonplace bit of the way.
'Tis the average man, may God bless him,
  Who pilots us, still in the van,
Over land, over sea, as we travel,
  Just the plain, hardy, average man.

So on through the days of existence,
  All mingling in shadow and shine,
We may count on the everyday hero,
  Whom haply the gods may divine;
But who wears the swarth grime of his calling,
  And labors and earns as he can,
And stands at the last with the noblest,
  The commonplace average man.
—Harper's Weekly.

A VENTURE FOR LOVE.

"AH, me! I am certainly no beauty. It was the gilding which made Vermount swallow such a nauseous pill."

In a Venetian mirror were reflected an oval face, pale and sad looking, with dark, liquid eyes, a nose of a nondescript order, and a mouth rather large than otherwise. Clarisse, Lady Vermount, turned from the study of her features to take from a table loaded with photographs the portrait of a handsome man.

"I am unhappy; for being which I am an idiot," she said, addressing the smiling face which looked at her out of its frame of pierced silver, "and it is all your doing. When you asked me to marry you I did not care a snap of my fingers for you, and I know you did not for me. It was a convenient arrangement; you wanted my money, I your title. How you shuddered on our wedding day over the too evident rapture of my parents at having a titled son-in-law! I saw it as we stood in the vestry of the church. You put your hand on mine when we were alone in the carriage, but did you for one moment imagine that I thought love inspired the action? Not a bit of it, I remembered the shudder too well."

"And then—well, and then I told you, you had got what you wanted, the wealth of my Chicago papa, and I had achieved my ambition, I was 'my lady.' For the rest, in the eyes of the world, we were husband and wife, and—that was to be all. If you wished anything different, you didn't show it, and I imagined myself content. We have been good friends; we have not had much opportunity of being otherwise, it is true. People don't quarrel over a well-cooked dinner, and that is about the only time in the twenty-four hours we are together. Oh! why don't I feel as coldly indifferent to you now as I did when I married you three months ago?"

She threw the photograph impatiently from her. It was nearly time to dress for dinner, and she went slowly up the stairs. On the landing Lord Vermount's man stood aside to let her pass.

"His lordship dines at home tonight?" she asked.

"Yes, my lady." The servant's footsteps padded decorously down the thickly carpeted staircase.

She paused by the door of her husband's bedroom, then passed on and entered her own. A moment and she was back again and stood within his chamber. His clothes lay ready for him, and on the dressing table a black silk mask, while propped against the looking-glass were two cards of admission to masked balls. One for this very night, the other for one three days hence. She took them up, twisted them nervously round in her fingers. Strange thoughts coursed through her brain. She put the cards down and ran out, coming back a minute later with a needleful of thick blue silk in her hands. She ran the needle in and out along the tail of his coat.

There was a sound of quick footsteps on the stairs. With a whisk she was out of the room and in her own. She shut the door, then stole softly to the one which divided her chamber from her husband's. It was locked, as it always was, and the key was stiff in its socket. She pressed her lips against the woodwork. "It is a venture for love," she whispered, and her eyes shone like stars.

* * * * * * *

"What pretty bird is it that wears a blue tail?"

The words spoken in soft, cooing accents struck on Lord Vermount's ear as he stood against a pillar of the ballroom. He turned sharply. A white-clad figure stood by him holding up his coat tail by a thread of blue silk, while, behind a white domino, dark eyes danced merrily.

"That would be telling," he answered, "but I think I'll shed my gay plumage," twisting to get hold of the thread.

"And I think I'll keep it, Sir Bird," drawing it out and winding it in and out of the links of a gold chain that held her long cloak together. "We will reverse the old order, the lady shall wear her knight's colors. Doth it please you, Sir Bird?" She dropped him a courtesy as she spoke, and a faint, delicate scent of white violets came to him, along with the silvery chiming of bells.

"In truth, fair maiden, it does," he answered, "but it would please me still better if you would dance with me."

The eyes behind the white domino had lost their merry look, but that which had replaced it made the blood beat quickly in his veins, as, without a word, she yielded herself into his arms.

"Are you tired?" he whispered.

"No, no, my knight."

He bent again and whispered some tender words in her ear; the scent of her violets, the chiming of her bells, had intoxicated him. They neared the entrance.

"I am tired now," she whispered, and before he realized her intention she had slipped from him and fled. Something white lay at his feet. He stooped to pick it up; it was a slip of paper, violet scented. "Three nights hence I shall be here again," was written on it. He put it away in his pocketbook and left the building.

"It will depend on Lady Vermount whether I come here again or not," he said to himself. "I've tried to keep straight, but I'll be hanged if I can go on with this arrangement at home much longer. I was a fool to begin with it, but I felt I owed so much to her that I did not like to oppose her wishes. Who would have imagined such a strength of cold purpose lay behind those eyes of hers?" He bit off the end of his cigar viciously, hailed a hansom and was driven homeward. He tried to think of his wife, but the jingle of the horse's bells recalled too vividly the girl in the white cloak. She had cast a spell over him which Lady Vermount's coldness—more pointed than ever during the next day or two—was not calculated to loosen.

Lord Vermount found himself on the night of the second masked ball dressing eagerly; he even ran up to his room at the last moment with a thread of blue silk, purloined from his wife's work bag, and with clumsy fingers inserted it in the tail of his coat. He would lose no chance of being recognized by his sorceress.

It was hours before he saw her white-cloaked figure drawing near him through the crowd of dancers, which he had watched with all the weariness of hope deferred. She did not speak, but, slipping one white rounded arm from the shelter of her cloak, laid it on his.

"Are we to dance?" he questioned. A slight movement of her hooded head and his hand slid round her waist beneath the cloak. For a space neither spoke. He felt her violet-scented breath coming in little quick gasps, and the music of her silver anklet bells seemed to his heated fancy to beat out the words, "Love, love!" to the measure of her footsteps. He breathed some tender words in her ear, and felt her whole frame quiver. A moment and she had drawn herself from him, and, lifting her face, let her glowing eyes rest on his face.

"My knight," she whispered, "dare I say au revoir?"

"Do not go," implored Lord Vermount, stretching out his hand to catch, not her cloak, but a slip of paper. He stood looking at it sullenly, long after the chiming of bells which marked her flight had ceased. "Little witch, let her go," he muttered, but untwisted the paper all the same.

"What impertinence! Well, I'll be hanged! So this is some scheme of her ladyship's; thinks to entangle me with this young woman that she may be free to carry on some little game of her own. I wonder what she will say to this revealing of her plot. H'm," reading the note. "All Americans are not as cold as you deem your wife to be; go home and ask her who I am; she knows." He smoked no cigar on the homeward drive on this night; his temper was too ruffled. He meant to have it out with his wife, despite the lateness, or rather earliness, of the hour; such affairs as this were better gone into at once. He went with no light footstep up the stairs and paused at her door, which was on the latch.

"Vermount, is that you? Push open the door a bit. I want to tell you something. I have had a letter from papa; he has just made a big thing over some railways; that means more dollars for you some day. Good night; shut the door now, and firmly, please."

Lady Vermount's voice was hard and cold; he shuddered at it. For the moment he was disposed to go and let matters drop; then some faint scent of violets which doubtless still hung about his coat sleeve altered his purpose. He took a step or two into the room.

A rose-colored satin curtain hanging down at right angles from the fireplace shut out his wife from his sight, but beyond its edge protruded a little Moorish stand on which was set a coffee equipage, and cups for two. A quaint shaped liqueur carafe and glasses were also on the tray.

"Two cups! Two glasses! What did this mean? Had his wife——"

A hand held the curtain slightly aside, a fresh whiff of violets assailed him, and a faint silvery chiming of bells. He made a hasty dash forward. Leaning back among the cushions of his wife's couch was the white-cloaked girl, her face still hidden by the mask.

"You here!" he cried. "Where is my—where is Lady Vermount?"

"She is"—fumbling for one moment with the mask which the next lay on the floor—"she is here." She sprang to her feet as she spoke and stood facing him, the cloak, with its gold clasp threaded through with the strand of blue silk, hanging back from her white shoulders.

"Clarisse, why, what does it mean?"

"It means"—she put out her hands imploringly—"it means—Oh! don't you see? It was a venture on my part, a venture to gain your love."

He let her stand there a full minute, the color coming and going in her cheeks, her dark eyes misty with unshed tears. He had never been a quick thinker, and he was fighting now against the prim prejudices of generations.

"Have I failed?" There was a heartache in each work. He felt the pain of them.

"No," he cried; "come!" and with a little shiver of gladness she let herself be caught in his outstretched arms.—Chicago Times-Herald.

NEED OF THE CANAL.

NICARAGUA DITCH WOULD SAVE TIME AND MONEY.

As a Business Venture Alone the Proposed Artery, It Is Claimed, Would Be a Big Bonanza in the Way of Tolls and Lock Charges.

That the proposed Nicaraguan canal is vital to the interests of the United States was emphatically demonstrated during the recent war with Spain when our battleship Oregon was compelled to make her long voyage down around the Horn to reach the scene of naval operations. The apprehension of the American people during the long detour was painfully and justly excited, while the Government was deprived of several weeks' service of its finest man-of-war during the time it required to sail down the west coast of South America and up on the eastern side. Then, again, the commercial benefits to be derived by the completion of the proposed short-cut waterway are inestimable. A most comprehensive article on the subject of the Nicaraguan canal has been written by Henry I. Sheldon, a Chicagoan. This is said by experts to be the most complete study of the canal question yet undertaken. Mr. Sheldon visited Nicaragua three years ago and traversed the entire route of the projected waterway, examined the work done, and secured reliable data as to cost and methods of construction. Mr. Sheldon went not as the agent of any company or of the Government, but merely as an individual having no interest, pecuniary or friendly, with the present company constructing the canal, and was careful to incur no obligations which would prevent his taking an unbiased view.

"It may be well to say at the outset," writes Mr. Sheldon, "that I reached the conclusion that the canal in Nicaragua is practicable, and can be constructed at a cost on which fair returns can be earned. It also seems clear that, for many reasons, it is not a suitable work for private capital to undertake, and that it will be better that our Government should assist the undertaking. There are strong equities on the side of national aid, inasmuch as the chief benefits will never be the tolls collected from passing vessels. The canal may so develop our trade with Eastern Asia that a single year of that trade will exceed in volume the total cost of its construction. Its opening will double in value almost every acre of agricultural land in California, Oregon and Washington, and the population of those States will be more than doubled. For many years I have occasionally visited the Pacific coast, for either business or pleasure, and always the most striking aspect of its condition has been the absence of satisfactory markets for its products. Not a bushel of its large wheat crop comes to the Atlantic coast by rail, as wheat cannot bear the cost of so long carriage. Neither can its lumber or ores come by rail. In many places, after the farmer or the fruit grower has paid the charges of transportation companies, there is little or nothing left for him. The population continues small because the markets are so inadequate. Twenty-five years' trial has demonstrated that if railroads are to be the sole means of communication the development of the Pacific States will be very slow. The only promise of relief is in securing for these States some shorter transportation to the Atlantic States, and also to Europe, by water. Now, everything carried by water must pass around Cape Horn. The only shorter route, apparently practicable, is by way of a ship canal across the isthmus, through Nicaragua. This will save 10,000 miles of the distance around Cape Horn, and will enable an ordinary steamer to go from San Francisco to New York in fourteen days. The exact distance, by such canal, will be 4,700 miles. The ordinary railroad freight service consumes from seventeen to twenty-one days. The canal line will be only about 60 per cent longer than the rail line.

MAP SHOWING ROUTE OF THE PROPOSED NICARAGUAN CANAL.

Needed in the Time of War.

"Our country is so widely extended, 3,000 miles from east to west, that cheap and speedy water transportation like this is almost absolutely needed to bind and hold it more closely together. At present, in time of war, such parts of our growing navy as might be on either the Atlantic or the Pacific side would be for a considerable time of no use on the other ocean. The canal, when built, will promote the development of better markets for our manufactures in foreign countries bordering on the Pacific. These are less exposed than those on the Atlantic to European competition. This nation cannot be considered a first-class power when our people are only buyers from the rest of the world. Exporting agricultural products does not make a great nation. The French and the Germans do not engage in such exportation, finding other activities to be more profitable. A glance at the principal food-exporting countries shows the truth. They are such countries as Southern Russia, India and, latterly, the Argentine Republic, and they are poor, and they stay poor. We need to keep our wheat, feed our operatives with it, and send abroad the products they manufacture. The change cannot come suddenly, but we should plan and work for it. Some neglected markets are near us. The Rio Grande is quite a small stream. One can ride a horse across it from Texas into Mexico and entering the first hotel, one finds an English cloth on the table in the dining room. The cups and plates are English, the cutlery from Germany and the waiters wear a suit of German clothes. There probably will not be an article imported from the United States in the house except a sewing machine. The demand is there, but we have carelessly, almost good-naturedly, made no effort to sell.

"In building up a foreign trade our natural course will be to begin with the countries where we shall meet least competition. In order to be profitable, trade requires to move along the lines of least resistance. Our geographical situation is such that we are the natural producers for all countries bordering on the Pacific ocean. The relative distance of European manufacturers, as compared with our own, gives us a great advantage. The idea of trying to sell much of our products to China and Japan is new to our people; but those countries are entering on a career of great development, and why should not the American people have a share in supplying their wants? The trade reports tell the story of their awakening. The purchases of their silver were:

In 1885	$28,000,000
In 1894	113,000,000

China bought from foreign countries:

In 1885	$132,000,000
In 1894	243,000,000

"We have not been alive to this demand. Of Japan's purchases abroad of $113,000,000 in 1894, we sold her only $11,000,000. We excelled in paying money to her, however, for in that year we bought of her goods amounting to $143,000,000. Of China's purchases from other nations of $243,000,000 in 1894, we supplied only $10,000,000. We were good buyers, however, taking $25,000,000 of her products. Our diplomatic agents report that with more alertness and enterprise we could have furnished to Japan, and at a reasonable profit, 60 per cent of all her foreign purchases in 1894. One reason why the people of our gulf States are so unanimous for a canal in Nicaragua, is that it will open an additional market for their cotton. The United States is the chief producer of the world's cotton, and prices for this product have been deplorably low of late years, entailing great privations in many Southern homes. It is the old story. We have been producing more cotton than we could find markets for. The new buyer of cotton is Japan. That country is going strongly into the manufacture of cotton goods, such as are used by the people of the warm countries, and now not only exports these goods to China, but undersells the English manufacturers in their own dependency of India."

Favors Government Ownership.

Mr. Sheldon takes strong ground in favor of absolute ownership and control of the Nicaragua canal by the United States Government. "Congress could prescribe the tolls to be paid by ships using the canal, making the charges sufficient to meet the expenses of operation and a suitable interest on the capital invested in the undertaking and also, if considered advisable, for an annual payment into a sinking fund, to meet, at maturity, any Government bonds which might have been issued.

"As commerce increased, the tolls could be lowered, and any other reduction in favor of American ships, found desirable as an aid in building up our carrying trade, could be made by the same authority. If any European complications as to the use of the canal arose, our Government would not be hampered by the existence of a canal company, nor by being obliged to obtain the current action of Nicaragua and Costa Rica, but would be in a position to decide for itself what course to take. The possible claims of England to joint control of the canal under the Clayton-Bulwer treaty should be ignored. Those claims could never be allowed, and we probably would hear little of them after we had constructed the canal with our own money and were in full possession. The Suez canal has been neutralized by an agreement between the great powers, but that waterway is closely connected with the Eastern question, the balance of power, and other large subjects involving the nations of Europe. There is no analogy as to neutralization between the situation at Suez and that at Nicaragua."

Estimates of Probable Revenue.

Mr. Sheldon's estimates of the probable revenue to be derived from the canal are encouraging. "As the conditions are so similar, it is necessary, in taking a broad view of probable earnings, to consider the business transacted by the Suez canal. The results there shown are more helpful than mere estimates; they are ascertained facts. That company deals with the world's commerce, just as will be done in Nicaragua. In 1895 its business amounted to 8,440,000 tons. It had then been in operation twenty-five years. The first year, 1870, its business was only 436,000 tons; in 1871, 760,000 tons; in 1872, 1,100,000 tons, and there has been a fairly steady increase ever since, up to the amount in 1895. During all this time the volume of the world's commerce has steadily increased. Not only has trade more and more adjusted itself to the Suez route, but also the aggregate amount of trade has become much larger. Some allowance should be made for the advantages possessed by the Suez canal as a now well-established route. Taking its business eight years ago may be a fair offset for this item. The amount for 1888 exceeded 6,000,000 tons. The earlier Suez tolls were $2.77 per ton, which have been gradually reduced the past twenty years, and traffic is not prepared now to stand heavy charges in any direction. A moderate tariff will be in every way desirable. A favorable, but approximate, estimate of the possible revenues in Nicaragua would be as follows: With tolls at $1.50 per ton at the outset, and a business of at least 6,000,000 tons after the canal is fairly in operation, a gross income of $9,000,000 would be obtained. Administration, maintenance and operation for 1895 cost the Suez canal about $1,800,000. Taking into account all the dam and embankment work at Nicaragua, as well as the heavy rainfall, an allowance of $3,000,000 as an annual average for expenses may be fair, leaving a net income of $6,000,000. An undertaking of this character is to be gone into only as a long-term investment, and the earnings for the first few years after it is completed are not to be considered as sufficient for a final judgment. The greatest earnings will come later on.

"The canal route, as at present projected, is to be 174 miles long from Brito on the Pacific to Greytown on the Atlantic. The first half mile from Brito is at sea level. Then in two miles the canal rises 110 feet, through three locks to the summit level, 151 miles long, then in 4½ miles it descends, through three locks, to sea level again, and then continues at sea level 9¼ miles to Greytown. The estimated time required for an ordinary steamer to cross from one ocean to the other is twenty-eight hours. Electric lighting is to make passage by night quite feasible. The allowance for passing through locks is forty-five minutes for each lock. Only twenty-six miles of the 168 miles of canal is to be through excavations. Some twenty-one miles is through basins, and 121 miles through the lake and the river. Provision should be made from the first for increasing the accommodation when it shall become necessary. Widening can be carried on at the same time that vessels are passing. So can deepening. To increase the size of the locks, however, will cause all traffic to be suspended. The locks in the present plans appear to be too small for permanent use. They are each to be 650 feet long, 70 feet wide, and 28 feet deep."

History of the Canal Scheme.

In December, 1881, Senator Miller of California introduced a bill in Congress to incorporate "The Marine Canal Company of Nicaragua," with the purpose of constructing the canal. Gen. U. S. Grant, Howard Potter, E. D. Morgan, H. J. Jewett and other prominent capitalists were concerned in the proposed enterprise. The bill met with bitter opposition in Congress, and was utterly defeated by the failure of the Marine Bank of New York, in which the Grants were ruined financially. The Nicaragua Canal Company was incorporated in 1887, with former Senator Warner Miller as president, and for a time made good progress. Its success induced opposition, and in 1889 the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, which received the sanction of President Cleveland, was incorporated. Hiram Hitchcock was the first president, but he was subsequently succeeded by Thomas B. Atkins. The work of digging the canal was begun and continued until financial misfortune overtook the enterprise, the construction company failing in the terrible panic of 1893. The contract for the construction was then awarded to Warner Miller Nicaragua Company, which still holds its concession. Many attempts have since been made to secure the aid of the Government, but the bills have failed to pass both houses. Congress, however, authorized the appointment of a technical commission of civil engineers to re-examine the canal line, and it is the report of this commission which will be presented to Congress in December.

The principal authorities on transportation statistics have made estimates that the Nicaragua route should divert from 2,000,000 to 3,000,000 tons of low-rate freight, such as flour, dry goods, machinery, coal, etc., from the overland traffic. Suppose 2,500,000 tons were diverted to steamship lines from the Atlantic and gulf ports, going by the canal route. With the usual ocean tonnage from New York to the Pacific, and other vessels which would go through the canal, a conservative calculation places the annual freight at 7,000,000 tons. At the lowest Suez canal rate this would give an annual revenue of $12,810,000. The route in favor runs from Greytown on the Atlantic coast, via the San Juan river and Lake Nicaragua to Brito, on the Pacific. The total distance is 174 miles, divided as follows:

	Miles.
Brito to lake	17.27
Lake Lajas to San Juan river	56.50
Slack water in the San Juan	68.54
San Francisco Basin Ochoa to Eastern divide	12.01
Cut through the Eastern divide	3.00
Canal to Greytown	16.48

The Nicaragua canal route was surveyed first by Col. O. M. Childs in 1852 for the then existing Transit company which had established transisthmian communication with California by steamer from Greytown by way of the San Juan river to Virgin bay on the west shore of Lake Nicaragua, and thence by stage to San Juan del Sur, about eight miles southeast of Brito. The route selected by Col. Childs, who was an eminent engineer, has not been improved upon very greatly by subsequent surveys. The last survey, made by Mr. Menocal for the Government, lays the line along the Lajas and Rio Grande rivers on the west. Between the headwaters of these rivers and the divide is lower and the route more practical than anywhere else. From there the route leads across the lake, thence by way of the San Juan river and canal cut to Greytown.

Tolstoi's Colonies.

Tolstoi colonies are increasing in Russia. The Tolstoians, of course, live together, having constructed their own houses and their own furniture; there is nothing new in this, the tale has been told before. What is remarkable is the arrangement of the mutual dining-table in the Tolstoi table d'hote. The bowl of the community—a bowl of soup—is shared among six persons, each dipping into the same dish, but having the right of personal property in the matter of a wooden spoon and salt. Bread also is private to the individual. Thus the six consumers get a fair start and then they are all off together. But one would have thought this a fatal arrangement. Age, teeth and digestion are sadly unequal. What is there to prevent the venerable grandmother from being left hopelessly behind by Ivan the Terrible, her youthful grandson, who treats the whole course as a point-to-point race, and so shows forth the eternal inequality of things? It is added that there is a beautiful simplicity and decency in these repasts, and that there are three napkins to each symposium. Thus we have six consumers to one bowl and three napkins to six consumers. But some will do well to avoid the table d'hote a la Tolstoi.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 10.....1899

The bill introduced in the Senate by Stratton to create a commission for the purpose of examining, testing and investigating voting machines and reporting on the same, avoids the defect of creat- a salaried body of commissioners, but it makes an unnecessarily liberal allowance for the purpose of carrying out the objects of the measure. The Commission is to consist of the Governor, Attorney-General and the Registrar of the city of San Francisco and will be provided with a salaried secretary and is authorized to hire experts at $10 a day, and to have constructed "not less than five nor more than ten voting machine of each such design or make as they may desire to test." To meet the expenditures that may be incurred in carrying out these provisions $25,000 is appropriated. The machine or machines selected by the Commission for testing under the provisions of the act, must be placed "at, in or near certain of the election booths in the city of San Francisco, or elsewhere, at the next general election, so that any or all voters desiring to test the same may have an opportunity of voting thereat." That such a precaution would prove a thorough test of the machines may be admitted, but it does not overcome the objection that a really good machine might be shut out from the contest by the Commission, and thus deprive the people of the right, which the author of the bill concedes, of assisting in the selection of the machine to be adopted.

There is every reason to believe that the backers of really meritorious machines, if invited to do so, would, at their own expense, arrange for a public test at the next general election. Such a test might be made under the auspices of the Registrar, who could make the necessary regulations to insure fairness, and the press would attend to the matter of giving such publicity to the workings that no Legislature would be at loss how to act in the premises. Under the circumstances, and considering the fact that there is much eagerness on the part of inventors to introduce their machines to public notice, it seems like sheer waste to expend $25,000 for the purpose. As for the proposition to have machines constructed at the public expense, it ought not to be entertained for a moment. If the chance of having his machine adopted is not a sufficient stimulus to an inventor he should nor enter the contest.

Caminetti has introduced a bill in the Assembly, which, if it becomes a law, will revolutionize political campaigning. It provides that no candidate for public office should treat any person to intoxicants, cigars, lemonade, soda etc. A violation of the law is to be punished by imprisonment, for from one to seven years. It is to be hoped that, if this measure is constitutional, it will become a law. It will correct the evil at which the purity of election law was in part directed and which it signally failed to reach. The expenses of campaigning have grown out of all proportion, and any local candidate will testify, or could were he so disposed, that the heaviest drain on his purse is by reason of the prevailing treating habit. Voters are not bought by a drink, but the average Californian despises penuriousness, and when a candidate declines to follow the accepted custom, his failure is usually attributed to stinginess. Thousands of dollars are expended in every community each year by county candidates, most of it by men who cannot afford to follow the custom but who do so because they wish to keep pace with the expectations of a certain voting class. The proposed law goes right to the root of the evil and its passage will do much towards purifying the political atmosphere.

A good deal is being said and printed about the possible extension of the Utah Central Railroad from Milford, its present terminus in Utah, to some railway connecting point in Southern California, possibly to Manvel in San Bernardino county, the present northern terminus of the California Eastern Railway, which connects with the Santa Fe-Pacific at Blake. The latest information on this head comes from a gentleman who lately returned to Los Angeles from a trip over the desert who met a large surveying party near Ludlow in San Bernardino county, and which is about one hundred miles west of the Needles on the Colorado river. There is also another surveying party in Nevada and a belief prevails that the object in view is to locate a road to connect with the Randsburg railway at Johannesburg, thence to Los Angeles and San Pedro, making anothdr through transcontinental road from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

The President's secretary, Porter, denies the rumor that the President is breaking down. One would think that the effort at avoiding anything like a policy, when there is such a clamor by his party throughout the country to have his "extension policy" endorsed, would break almost any man down. By the way, the headlines in the daily papers inform us that Congress is about to force the President to announce a policy by passing a joint resolution that he must either approve or veto. He is certainly entitled to the appellation, "The Great Policy Avoider!"

A dispatch says that Governor Gage is likely to be called before the investigating committee to tell what he knows about the use of patronage in the Senatorial fight. There is little real danger of this coming to pass, however. The committee appears to have a tender and respectful feeling for all those in high places.

HAPPY MOMENTS.

Ho For the Hen and the Cow!

Sing ho for the South Dakota cow,
Sing hi for the little brown hen!
Such a couple was never on earth below
To feather the nests of men.
With the golden products of good Queen Bess
No "udder" can compare,
While the snowy fruit of the cackling "bute"
Brings a solace for every care.
Men risk their lives for the shining ore
Deep laid in a frozen clime,
When these faithful servants bring them more
And peace at the selfsame time.
With pasture in plenty and bugs galore
They never will lack for feed.
Their stock is at par at the grocery store
For things that the farmers need.
Then three times three for the bovine "she,"
And three for the female fowl!
At the farmer's door, which they feed before,
No wolf has a chance to howl.
No poet's dream ever hatched a theme
More worthy a poet's pen
Than the kindly queen of the prairies green
And the busy, cackling hen.

COUNTY OF INYO.

To FRANK COLE and JOHN SULLIVAN:

You are hereby notified that I have expended One Hundred (100) Dollars in labor and improvements upon that certain quartz mine or mining claim situate, lying and being in the South Park Mining District, County of Inyo, State of California, commonly known, called and recorded in the mining records of said County as the Black Rock mine, as will appear from certificate filed in the office of the County Recorder of said Inyo County, in order to hold said premises for the year 1898, under the provisions of Section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, being the amount required to hold the same for the year ending December 31st, 1898. And if within ninety days after the publication of this notice you fail or refuse to contribute your proportion of such expenditures as co-owners, to wit, the sum of thirty-three dollars and thirty three cents each, your interests in said claim will become the property of the subscriber under said Section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and under Section One of an Act entitled "An Act relating to the working, rights of way easements and drainage of mines in the State of California," approved March 31, 1891. BORN.

HESSION—At Big Pine, February 4th, 1899, to Mr. and Mrs. R. P. Hession, twin daughters.

Mrs. S. E. Vermilyea has gone to Bishop.

Every body had a fine time at the dance Saturday night.

Spring house cleaning is in order, and gardens are being cleaned up.

Miss Emma Chalfant is a guest of Miss Lena Thompson of Camp Inbependence.

White Smith Esq. was down from Bishop early in the week on legal business.

A. M. Givens, J. F. Beale and Ben Hoskins were on a hunting trip early in the week.

F. McIver arrived home Monday evening from a trip to San Francisco and Sacramento.

A fine assortment of fresh fish will be received at the Independence market this evening.

Hilario Arambula brought in a lot of gold from Mazourka early in the week. The Ramsey Bros. and Williams are making good pay.

J Dave Rogers and a man named Smith have a good prospect at Old Coso. They are sinking on a four-inch ledge which assays $200 a ton.

L. W. Barnaby and Sam Spratt were down from Big Pine yesterday. They are getting ready to start the Big Pine saw mill as soon as spring opens.

For Sale—One two-year-old stallion by Osito, dam by Albenton and one the same age by Osito, dam by Flash, sec and dam by Fallis, third dam by John Nelson.

A correspondent from Manilla to the Randsburg Miner says: "The country is full of the blushing fair, but it will take you about a month to tell the women from the monkeys, they are so d—n homely."

T. H. Jones of Ventura, accompanied by his brother-in-law, W. A. Vareor, of Los Angeles, arrived at Independence yesterday from Bishop and leave for the south to-day. The gentlemen are interested in a group of mines near Bishop, and are also looking over the mining situation throughout the county.

The Celestial inhabitants are making the devil sick of his job and at the same time punishing John Barleycorn and Tom Gin and the fruit of the poppy pretty severely. There has been more popping about town the past few days than at an old fashioned husking bee.

It is reported that S. A. Densmore and H. D. Gill met with an accident a few days ago. They were an their way to Ballarat with a load of fruit and in going down Shepherd's Canyon the brake broke, letting the wagon on the team which ran away and smashed things up generally. Gill was considerably bruised and fortunately for Mr. Densmore, he was walking at the time of the accident.

To The Public.

During the many years we have been doing business with you we have never made a practice of advertising fake sales. We have concluded to make one important changes in our business, and in consequence offer our entire stock at actual cost for cash. This sale will continue for ninety days and will be without reserve. This is an opportunity never before offered the people of Inyo and should be taken advantage of. At the end of the time specified we shall announce some radical changes in our business. Thanking you for the generous patronage you have accorded us and soliciting its continuance, we remain,

Yours Respectfully,
N. RHINE.

QUARANTINE LAWS.

The following bill has been introduced in the Assembly by the committee on Public Health, and is in response to the article published in last week's INDEPENDENT.

SECTION 1. The office of the state veterinarian of the state of California is hereby created. It shall be the duty of the governor within sixty days from and after the passage of this act to appoint a skilled veterinary surgeon for the state of California to fill said office of state veterinarian, who, at the date of such appointment, shall be a graduate of good standing of a recognized college of veterinary surgery, and legally qualified to practice as such in this state; and who shall hold his said office for a term of two years, unless sooner removed; the salary of said veterinary surgeon shall on no account exceed the sum of two thousand dollars per annum and his necessary expenses incurred in the discharge of his duties, hereinafter provided for, not exceeding five hundred dollars per annum. In making such appointment, it shall be the duty of the governor to disregard political affiliations and be guided in his selection merely by professional and moral qualifications of said veterinary for the performance of his duties.

Sec. 2. It shall be the duty of the state veterinarian provided for in the first section of this act to protect the health of the domestic animals of this state from all contagious and infectious diseases; and for this purpose he is hereby authorized and empowered to establish, maintain and enforce such quarantine, sanitary and other regulations as he may deem necessary. Whenever it may be necessary to carry out and give effect to the provisions of this act, the governor is hereby authorized and empowered to appoint an assistant state veterinarian, whose tenure of office and salary shall be determined and fixed by the governor.

Sec. 3. Upon information by him received of the existence of contagious or infectious diseases of domestic animals within this state, the state veterinarian shall proceed to thoroughly investigate the same, and he is hereby authorized to establish such quarantine, sanitary and police regulations as may be necessary to circumscribe and exterminate such disease or diseases and prevent an extension thereof, and he is hereby authorized and empowered to enter upon any grounds or premises and inspect any live stock necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

Sec. 4. When the state veterinarian shall have determined the quarantine and other regulations necessary to prevent the spread among domestic animals of any malignant contagious or infectious disease found to exist among the live stock of this state, he shall notify the governor thereof who shall issue his proclamation proclaiming the boundary of such quarantine, and the orders, rules, and regulations prescribed for the maintenance and enforcement of such quarantine, and shall publish the same in such manner as he shall deem expedient.

Sec. 5. Any person failing to comply with the provisione of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined not less than one hundred nor more than five hundred dollars for each offense, and shall be liable for any damage or loss that may be sustained by any person or persons by reason of the failure of such owner or agent to comply with the provisions of this act.

Sec. 6. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act there shall be appropriated the sum of ten thousand dollars out of the general fund of this state not otherwise appropriated.

Sec. 7. This act shall be in force and effect from and after its passage.

An Inyoite Near Manila.

The following is a portion of a letter received by one of our townspeople from a former resident of Inyo county.

Manila Bay is a beautiful wide bay with numerous ships anchored about in its waters. The city of Manila is very dirty but is picturesque with its Spanish styled houses. The sanitary conditions are improving steadily so that sickness is lessening every day. Cavite is where I am living and is six miles away from Manila by water and sixteen miles by land. A ferry plies between the two places and reminds one very much of Oakland and San Francisco. Cavite is very healthy and the quaintest little town imaginable with its narrow streets and natives whose wearing apparel consists of a skirt and plain, straight piece of goods wrapped about the body and pinned in front. The waist is fashioned like an Eton jacket with bishop sleeves not gathered in at the wrist. I was very much disappointed to find none of the beauty I heard so much of in the States. Cavite would be an island but for a causeway ten or fifteen yards wide which connects it with the mainland. This causeway leads to San Roque, a very picturesque village with its nipa huts nestling among the trees and tropical verdure. In this place is where many of the insurgents live, and the Filippinos of Cavite are afraid to venture in San Roque. Those living in Cavite are friendly to the Americans and carry on business, and while the San Roque people are not openly hostile toward us, I don't believe they bear us any good will. We have no fear, however, for we are well fortified and it is almost an impossibility for the enemy to make a landing here. From our house, which is only fifty yards away from the water, we can see Dewey's fleet and the wrecks of the Spanish ships. The view is beautiful, and the climate is simply perfect. I suppose the heat will be very oppressive in a month. One hears such dreadful tales in America of there places, but I find half of them untrue and the other half exaggerated. It is certainly necessary to take every precaution, such as boiling drinking water, eating no native fruits and taking a dose of quinine occasionally as a preventive of malaria.

Big Pine News.

BIG PINE, February 7, 1899.

ED. INDEPENDENT:

The late Klondike weather came just in time to properly punctuate the fruit season of '99 at the hamlet. Fruit culturists say that the fruit buds indicate a bountiful yield if Jack Frost doesn't make a late sneak. The result of sending samples of last season's fruit crop to the Board of Trade and Chamber of Commerce, Los Angeles, brought orders for four carloads to L. M. Newman, thus showing that the literary compliments of the southern press are founded on fact and merit. Some adverse criticism has been indulged in anent the late appointments filling the Board of Directors of Agricultural District No. 18. The minutes of preliminary meetings held immediately before the 11th annual Fair of said District show that a representative of Bishop went on record with a plain unequivocal agreement to the effect that in the event of an appropriation for the District, the hamlet should be entitled to first chance at the next meet. There is a reward of first prize to the discoverer of the least indication on the part of any member of the present Board to take advantage of that incident. The dwellers of Big Pine from their geographical situation have profited by disinterested observation of the kicks, splits and antagonist ambition of other towns in the county and will heed the lesson well. We are well aware that any contumacy of conduct in the premises would act boomerangically, recognizing well that the District fair is a game in which no lone hand can win.

The electors of this district, irrespective of political taint, were pleased that Hon. P. H. Mack was not turned down in the contest for seat in the 60th Assembly district. They recognize the fact that "swapping horses while crossing a stream" would in this instance have given the district scant time to enter the acquired nag. Notwithstanding the handicap of the contest, the successful record being made by Mack at Sacramento pleases our people.

The building on the hamlet plat still continues. Mr. George Hall of Alvord has moved into his reconstructed dwelling in the Naylor addition, and Mr. Pulliser will soon occupy a neat structure just west of the French saloon. Quite a number of new dwellings will be constructed during the closing year of the century. La Grippe has visited quite a number of our people. At the present writing Mr. L. A. Eugley is wrestling with this unwelcome guest.

Mr. Orie Whiting, the landlord of the Nucleous House, Hawthorne, is a guest at the Williams House.

The Big Pine school under the management of Walter J. Hanby, is in fine shape. This son of a veteran is scoring success seldom attained by a first attempt in the higher grades Miss Matilda Meysan of the Primary department is meeting the expectations of the trustees and gaining the loyal support of parents and pupils.

The proprietors of rapid saddle horses are talking "hoss-race" on the 22nd of Washington.

Respectfully,
SWAMPER.

Vaccination.

To those who cannot have the services of a physicion it may be of advantage to know that it does not require an expert to do vaccination; but it does require fresh virus or lymph. Vaccination, the great prophylactic against small pox, is performed by introducing into an abraded surface the virus or lymph from the eruption of cow-pox which is taken from the udder of the heifer, or lymph which has passed through the human system. Either the ordinary crust from the arm or points or quills charged from the heifer may be used. Though the bovine virus direct is apt to be followed by a higher grade of inflamation, it has no special advantage over the human variety. I can say that even though a person may have been exposed to small pox, if he is immediately vaccinated the chances are that by the quick action of the vaccination the disease will be anticipated in many cases either aborted or greatly mitigated.

The method of performing vaccination is simple as it is only necessary to abrade or scarify the skin and introduce a little of the moistened virus, when the capillaries will take it into the circulation. Hence, the only precaution would be noi to draw too much blood, but simply produce a blush with exudation of serum and you have the best possible condition for securing a successful vaccination. If successful, a vaccination will show itself this way: On the fifth day after the introduction a red papule appears; between the sixth and eighth days this papule becomes a decided vesicle; by the ninth day the vesicle reaches its height and is surrounded by an immense angry red areola: by the tenth or eleventh day it becomes a matured pustule with a proportionate areola; from the thirteenth to fifteenth day the local inflamation fades, and the crust or scab forms, which finally falls off about the twentieth day. This is my experience in a practice of fifty years.

Ballarat Items.

The last of the Harrison Mill and Machinery Co.'s machinery has arrived, and everything is being put in place rapidly.

The evening before Mr. and Mrs. Emerick left here for San Frnncisco the ladies of Ballarat and vicinity gave them a farewell party at Sportsman hall. Nearly the entire 400 turned out and had a jolly time. Professor Suney's full string band furnished the music. Our hostess, Mrs. Calloway, furnished a fine turkey supper at twelve and the affair wound up with a grand hurrah for the first dance at Ballarat.

DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

RELIEF FROM PAIN.

Women Everywhere Express their Gratitude to Mrs Pinkham.

Mrs T. A. WALDEN, Gibson, Ga., writes:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—Before taking your medicine, life was a burden to me. I never saw a well day. At my monthly period I suffered untold misery, and a great deal of the time I was troubled with a severe pain in my side. Before finishing the first bottle of your Vegetable Compound I could tell it was doing me good. I continued its use, also used the Liver Pills and Sanative Wash, and have been greatly helped. I would like to have you use my letter for the benefit of others."

Mrs. FLORENCE A. WOLFE, 515 Mulberry St., Lancaster, Ohio, writes:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—For two years I was troubled with what the local physicians told me was inflammation of the womb. Every month I suffered terribly. I had taken enough medicine from the doctors to cure anyone, but obtained relief for a short time only. At last I concluded to write to you in regard to my case, and can say that by following your advice I am now pefectly well."

Mrs. W. R. BATES, Mansfield, La., writes:

"Before writing to you I suffered dreadfully from painful menstruation, leucorrhœa and sore feeling in the lower part of the bowels. Now my friends want to know what makes me look so well. I do not hesitate one minute in telling them what has brought about this great change. I cannot praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound enough. It is the greatest remedy of the age."

She Hadn't.

There is a young lady who has a little private school, and the other day she overheard the following conversation among her pupils:

It was Monday, and one of them had evidently been much impressed with her Sunday school lesson of the day before, for as soon as another little girl came in she astounded her by the announcement, "You are my sister."

"I'm not," said No. 2.

"You are," said No. 1. "Haven't you got a Father in heaven?"

"Yes," grudgingly.

"Well, so have I. Don't that make you my sister?"

No. 2 was entirely nonplused at that and No. 1 correspondingly victorious, so when another little girl arrived upon the scene she announced as before, "You are my sister."

Now No. 3 happened to be a young lady of a very determined disposition, and she declared just as firmly that she was nothing of the sort, and the "I'm nots" and "You ares" flew very fast for a minute, until No. 1 brought out her knockdown argument, "Haven't you got a Father in heaven?"

But imagine her chagrin and the teacher's amusement when the other sputtered forth: "No, I haven't, and you know it. I've just got one grandfather up there," and strode on to her seat, leaving the enemy vanquished behind her.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

How Insects Hide From Enemies.

How many have ever noticed the skillful way in which many insects disguise themselves when in danger from some larger animal or bird? Probably you have all observed that the caterpillar "plays dead" when he is disturbed, and that many insects choose for their homes some tree or shrub whose bark or foliage matches themselves in color.

There is a certain variety of moth, quite common around elms, which fixes its wings so that they closely resemble spots or lichens on the bark of the tree and can only be detected by a trained eye. Another moth, whose principal colors are pink and yellow, arranges itself on the blossom of a primrose so as to wholly escape notice. In the East Indian islands there is a spider which reposes on the upper side of a large leaf in such shape that it perfectly resembles decayed matter.

A hunter in tropical regions tells of seeing a cricket pursued around the trunk of a tree by a lizard. Suddenly the insect settled itself in a small depression in the bark, spread out its wings slightly and flattened itself so that the lizard actually crawled over it and went away without ever knowing what had become of it.—Lewiston Journal.

He Was Slow.

They had been "keeping company" for eight years, and, when he finally proposed and was accepted, in the ardor of his enthusiasm he exclaimed, "Darling, you are worth your weight in gold!"

With almost cruel facetiousness she replied, "That is saying a good deal, for it was an awful long wait."—Richmond Dispatch.

Far Worse.

Sniggleton—I'm in trouble. My landlady told me I'd have to settle up or leave.

Gigg'leton—Why, you're in luck, old fellow. I'm in a worse fix than that. My landlady told me I'd have to settle up before I could leave.—Exchange.

Rose of Christmas.

IT was the eve of Christmas.

The air was frosty—men's boot heels made the snow creak under them as they passed with the quick tread of those who had but a few hours left in which to anticipate the coming of the Christmas saint and the advent of Christ-myth in their homes.

Christmas greetings mingled with the orders of the shopkeepers to hasten the delivery of goods, the furs and satins of the millionaire's wife brushed against the faded, threadbare shawl of the shivering woman from the city's darkest slums, who had stolen a brief and hopeless holiday from toil that in this one hour of the world's joy she might breathe the incense of an unknown existence of happiness, of gifts, of plenty, of a fabulous and dream-like ease, a vision that floated before her starved eyes in dimmer unreality than the storied tales of pagan magnificence.

A flood of brilliant light poured out from the shops. Such was the luxury of the holiday season that not only the signs of winter were evident, but the garnered treasures of all lands. There were fruits from Persia and Arabia, gems from every nation that the sun shines on, luxurious furs from polar regions, where only intrepid explorers have trod, silks from lands where the sun pours a fiery flood the year round, the choicest and daintiest bits from Egypt, India, Siam, a bewildering array from the islands of the sea and from the capitals of the European and Asiatic nations. Countries whose history told of the Christ-myth so far in the dim light of history that its origin is lost, piled their wares side by side with the unequaled productions of the new world, rivaling in costliness and beauty all that appeared to tempt the hearts and the purses of men.

Amid this Christmas joy Philip Meredith walked with an acrid and indefinable pain at his heart. A gray, leaden mood had settled over him like a fog. He made a strenuous effort to forget. He had told himself that the coming of this anniversary should not overwhelm him with that agony of recollection which he knew down in his innermost soul he could not endure. For days the approaching holiday had filled him with an unacknowledged terror.

It was the first Christmas he had spent without her, without Mirabel. And, telling himself that he would forget, that he would not remember, he straightway remembered with the intimate fidelity of pain all that could wound him now.

A breath of fragrant air from out a florist's shop made him turn his head for a moment, and as he looked he saw forget-me-nots. The sight gave him a pang. He recalled the morning they had first met. It was a morning in spring, fresh with innocence: Her eyes were blue—blue like the forget-me-nots. Then, less than a year later, they were wed, and the one Christmas they had spent together had seemed to him more exquisite in its perfect happiness than the one on the plains of Judea could have been to the shepherds. Then came misery; scarcely had the echo of the Christmas bells died away in the air than that fatal episode had occurred that had parted them. It arose in a trifle, as most of the world's misery and wars have, and then before he knew it he had said words that had made a gulf between them which it seemed could never be bridged. She said she would go away and battle with the world by herself; he made a brutal reply. Then they parted, but when, after a few days of devastating loneliness, he went to seek her, she had gone.

So the year had dragged out its course and this terrible holiday was at hand. It flaunted itself before his eyes—its joy mocked him at every step—his ineffectual attempts to forget it brought it more vividly before him.

Again the opulence of a florist's shop met his gaze. A sudden resolution came to him; he stepped up to the window and speculated between orchids and lilies.

"Ah, Philip, I see you are choosing my Christmas gift," said a voice at his elbow. He turned—it was his cousin, a woman born to bring to others some of the light and joy denied them in their own poor lives. "Do not hesitate so," she continued, laughing, "you know how easily I am pleased in the matter of flowers. Shut your eyes and choose whatever you see first when you open them, and it will suit me."

"It will give me more pleasure to suit your taste than to trust to a haphazard choice," he replied. "Come with me straight into the shop and say what you will have."

"Oh, Philip," said the woman, her eyes filling with a soft mist, "you are always good and generous, and I will let you give me flowers, but not for myself. Have you forgotten my poor people in the hospitals? Give me the flowers for them. I cannot have too many of them, and, oh, Philip, you cannot imagine how much joy they will bring the sick and suffering."

"You may have all you want," he said. "Here they are, roses, violets, orchids, lilies of the valley—what will you?"

* * * * * * *

It was Christmas morning in St. Joseph's hospital. There was a faint antiseptic odor in the air. The long lines of narrow white cots stretched their serried rows down the room in pitilessly quiet array. On one cot lay a woman, who was a mystery to the hospital officials. She had been brought in late in the afternoon of the day before insensible. She was young and beautiful; her clothing was that of a gentlewoman; she had all the marks of refinement, albeit with certain signs of toil, but every mark that could identify her had been carefully clipped from her garments. For hours the watchers thought the angel of death would stop at her before he took the one next her. Yet he passed her by, and in the early hours of the morning she revived and murmured words they could but indistinctly understand. Toward noon she revived so that her conversation became intelligible. But with the return of consciousness she seemed to guard her secret more closely. She refused to answer the questions of the hospital physicians, and insisted that she would soon be strong and well and would leave the hospital.

The Christmas flowers had come in and the nurse selected the finest bunch of American beauty roses in the lot and took them to her patient. She lay, limp and silent, in her cot. It was her first experience in a hospital. She reflected vaguely, that it would be her last. She had fainted on her way to the river, it is true, but that was no reason why she should not carry out her design. It was only a question of time. The nurse approached her. She bore a large box.

"Here is something for you," she said.

It was a large white box; around it were wide, pale blue ribbons. A spray of holly lay on the top. She looked at it listlessly.

"Shall I open it for you?" said the nurse pleasantly. "It was sent especially for you by a friend."

The pale patient almost smiled. The nurse's kindness was almost pathetic.

"There is no one to send me flowers," she said, "but you may open it for me."

The nurse did so. A rush of fragrance filled the air. The roses burst upon the vision of the pale woman with the glory of midsummer, dazzling in their brightness. They lay in their satin-padded home like fragrant jewels.

"Oh, how beautiful!" she cried. "Let me have them."

As she took them a card fell out. She looked at it as one might look at a dear face that had been hidden for years. Her eyes dilated. She was silent for one moment, then she cried out in a voice that thrilled the nurse and caused every head in the ward to be lifted from its pillow.

"It is he!" she cried. "It is he. I must go at once."

They remonstrated with her, but the sick woman was well. She arose from that pale couch with sudden vigor—her eyes were bright—every trace of illness left her. "I must go to him," she repeated, time and again. The doctors came and looked at her and then conferred in a low tone with the nurse. "She may go," they said.

So she took her roses and walked down the street. It was a beautiful morning—the sun shone brightly and the air was crisp—one could not have guessed that the angel of death had hovered near her during the night. She walked some distance and then she neared a church. On its steps, just stepping out to go down the avenue, was a man. His restless agony had driven him forth in the early morning to try to exorcise the demon that would not let him rest. He had passed the church, and, drawn by an impulse he could neither define nor resist, he had entered. With the strains of the "Gloria in Excelsis" ringing in his ears he went out. As he stood on the steps of the cathedral and looked casually down the street he saw what made his heart stand still. A mist swam before his eyes—his knees shook under him. He hastened toward her.

"Mirabel!" he gasped.

She looked up at him with a smile.

"I was going to see you," she said simply.

The morning sunshine made a halo about her head. Her eyes were filled with a dewy sweetness. The purple shadows of the aftermath of pain were slipping away on the horizon before the glory of dawning day. He felt dazzled. His heart leaped, then burned within him. He drew her arm within his own and they turned down a quiet side street. She smiled at him.

"I knew you would find me some time," she said, with an infinitely gentle air. "When they brought me your roses in the hospital this morning and I saw your dear name once more I knew that our trouble and separation were over forever. Sweetheart, how good it is to see you once more."

He understood how fate had played with those Christmas roses, and in the sudden illumination of his mind and heart he felt as if he had narrowly escaped falling over a precipice.

As they walked down the street together the bells rang "Glory to God in the Highest," and white pigeons circled around the steeple.

"IT IS HE!" SHE CRIED.

SAFETY DEPOSIT BUSINESS.

Husband's Statement Concerning His Wife's Appearance Causes Trouble.

The growth of the safety deposit business since 1892 has been enormous in all large cities. The boxes in these palaces of nickel and steel and marble rent by the year from $3 for a small one to $50 and upward for the large ones. The renters cover every grade and walk of life. Women are often renters, and in many of the vaults special accommodations are made for the gentle sex.

They are encouraged to go there, not only on business connected with the vaults, but for social and business purposes. In some of the vaults, beside the private retiring rooms, which are provided in which to examine the contents of the boxes, there are reception rooms in which women who rent boxes may meet their friends and have a cup of tea or chocolate or a lemonade, says the Chicago Chronicle.

The renters of boxes in these vaults, besides giving the officials all necessary information concerning themselves, such as full name, signature, residence, business, age, hight, weight, color of eyes, hair and general complexion, are also required, if they desire their wives to use the second key to the box, to give similar details concerning her. The manager of one popular vault says that the ignorance of most men concerning the general physical characteristics of their wives is amazing. The majority are uncertain as to her complexion, and not one in twenty can tell the color of the wife's eyes or hair, although probably 75 per cent. of them wrote sonnets to both when they were courting.

They are equally at sea as to her age and weight, or at least they appear to be. Not long ago a man who had given very uncertain answers concerning his wife brought her down a fortnight afterward and introduced her to the manager. She was shown about the place and the requested to put her signature at the foot of the page which her husband had filled out. The husband was looking over his box in a private room. She put her name in the book, and then looked over the page. Her eyes began to dilate and her lip quivered; then she burst into a torrent of tears. She snatched at the page and before they could prevent her she tore it from the book and threw it on the floor, trampling it under foot. As she did so she said between her sobs: "T-t-t-t-thirty-seven years old! The brute! Hair auburn! T-t-the w-r-retch! I wonder who he was t-t-thinking of! Weight, 160 p-p-pounds!" and she swept out of the building to settle with the husband when he came home.

HOW FAST DO YOU WRITE?

It Is Said that a Very Rapid Writer Can Write a Mile of Copy in a Day.

Seeking for information, certain questions were asked of an expert whose profit lies, as a manufacturer, in producing one of the most popular self-feeding pens on the market. This authority said that "a dip of ink ought to write 100 words. That in an hour about thirty drops of ink were used, and that in the sixty minutes the pen traveled some eighth of a mile. It all depended on the idiosyncrasy of the writers."

In order to test this, a number of "habitual and hardened" scribes were asked to take one dip only of ink, and they were to work off their copy in their usual elegant or slovenly manner. As far as averages went, the result was disheartening. One man wrote 144 words with the one dip and another 14, and the characters of the 144-word man were very much more legible than those of the 14-word man. There was a lady—a graceful contributor to journalism—and in her Italian hand she wrote eight words to the dip, and the faster she produced copy the less words she wrote to the single dip.

It is the measurement of the writing—one-eighth of a mile to the hour—which is curious and to think it possible that there may be industrious scribes who write every day of their lives more than a mile of copy! We wheel faster, we cover a mile in a trotting sulky more speedily, or we play a finer game of billiards now than ever, because the machines, or the track, or the table and the balls are better constructed. With improved pens, ink, inkstand and paper do we write any more speedily than in the olden time? The probability is that we are faster in our writing, the mechanical impediments having been diminished; yet the penman, even with the typewriter, never kept pace with the rapidity of his thoughts.—New York Times.

A Small Boy's Predicament.

The Chicago Record reports a pretty lively adventure which befell a five-year-old Iowa boy last summer. He had gone out to the wheat field where his father was driving the harvester, and had begged to be taken up on the high seat by his father's side.

The harvester was one of those wonderful labor-saving machines of which farmers use so many in these days. It cut the wheat, swept it into sheaves, bound them, and tossed them aside.

For a time all this was very interesting to the little fellow. Then he grew tired of sitting still, and began to squirm, and before the father knew what was going on, the boy had tumbled off.

He screamed as he found himself going; but before the horses could be stopped, the machinery had caught him, rolled him up in a bundle of wheat, bound him about the legs and the neck with twine, and there he lay on the ground.

He was not hurt. A little skin had been scraped from one of his shoulders and he was, or thought he was, almost choked. That was all; but he was very much frightened.

Women Workers in Germany.

It is officially stated that there are in Germany three women employed as chimney sweeps, thirty-five as slaters, seven as gunsmiths, nineteen as brass and bell founders, fifty as pavers, 147 as coppersmiths, 379 as farriers and nailers, 309 (including girls) as masons, eight as stonecutters, and 2,000 in marble, stone and slate quarries.

A man should never tell his wife to hurry up when she is coming down stairs.

It's difficult to find a man who is willing to hold the ladder of success while you ascend it.

Healthy, Happy Girls

often, from no apparent cause, become languid and despondent in the early days of their womanhood. They drag along always tired, never hungry, breathless and with a palpitating heart after slight exercise so that merely to walk up stairs is exhausting. Sometimes a short dry cough leads to the fear that they are "going into consumption."

They are anæmic, doctors tell them, which means that they have too little blood. Are you like that? Have you too little blood?

More anæmic people have been made strong, hungry, energetic men and women by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People than by any other means. They are the best tonic in the world.

Miss Lulu Stevens, of Gasport, Niagara Co., N. Y., had been a very healthy girl until about a year ago, when she grew weak and pale. She lost her appetite, was as tired in the morning as on retiring, and lost flesh until she became so emaciated that her friends hardly knew her. The doctors declared the disease anæmia, and gave her up to die. A physician who was visiting in Gasport prevailed upon her to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. She did so, and was benefited at once. She is now well and strong—the very picture of health.—Buffalo (N. Y.) Courier.

Three Minerals.

The Chicago Chronicle says that a teacher in one of the local schools was instructing a class of small children in mineralogy the other day, endeavoring to make clear to their young minds what a mineral really is. Standing before them, she began in her clear voice: "A mineral is an inorganic, homogeneous substance of definite, or approximately definite, chemical composition, found in nature. Do you understand me? Come, now, you all have seen minerals, and your mothers and fathers have told you the names of them, haven't they? Of course they have. Now, can any one tell me the names of three minerals?"

There was no response, and she continued, "Have not some of you been out and seen minerals on exhibition?" One little girl raised her hand. "I thought so. Mary will name three minerals." Mary arose and, patting her hands behind her, lisped:

"Apollinaris, vichy and selers."

Mourning by Proxy.

Our ways of showing respect to the dead would surely be past the comprehension of the Martians or of anybody else whom custom has not blinded to the absurdity of some of the things we do. For example, a funeral procession went out Fourteenth street one sunny afternoon recently, and in the train I recognized the carriage of a woman I know. A little surprised at her presence, I glanced at the carriage windows, but the shades were down. I pictured her within, so overcome with grief at her friend's death that she could not bear the curious eyes of chance passers. That same afternoon I met her coming out of a theater—gay, rosy, laughing. She had been to the matinee, while her empty carriage, in token of her sorrow, followed her dead friend to the grave.—Washington Star.

Objection In Logic.

"Unless ye repent, so likewise shall ye all perish," thundered the missionary.

Young-Man-Not-Afraid-of-Anybody Else's-Horses, the leading spirit of the Muskrat Lake John Stuart Mill club, rose in some agitation.

"How," he asked, not unearnestly, "do you reconcile what you say with the dictum that the only good Indian is a dead Indian?"

Showing conclusively that the aborigine can be dialectic if not enlightened.—Detroit Journal.

Came Too Late.

Traveler from frontier district, striking hotel where advanced fashions have obtained, observes with an expression of pleased surprise the finger bowl set before him at the close of his meal. "What's that for, waiter?"

"To wash your hands, sir."

"I wish I'd 'a' know'd it 'fore I began my dinner."—Mrs. B. Harrison in "Good Americans."

RECORD OF A YEAR.

Important Events Crowded the Past Twelve Months.

MUCH HISTORY MADE.

The Year 1898 Will Be Remembered as a Most Notable One.

A Chronological Review Shows It to Have Been Remarkable in Many Respects—War with Spain Takes Foremost Place in the Interesting Record—Concise Story of That Victorious Conflict—International and Internal Dissensions Among European Countries—Disaster and Death at Home and Abroad.

To him who is concerned with history in the making there very rarely comes a year more heavily laden with important events than the year 1898. It has seen every state in Europe, except peaceful Scandinavia and the Dutch communities, face to face with either war or internal dissolution—some of them within measurable distance of both. Yet the greatest effects have not been in Europe; 1898 has seen the United States forced, not by any greed of power, but by its humanitarian ideals, to take its part in European relations. A brief but glorious armed conflict with Spain has been begun, prosecuted to its end and settled by a treaty of peace upon which the ink is scarcely dry. The inception of great political changes has been witnessed in China; two European rulers have come to their death; several men and women prominent in statecraft, military affairs, reform, literature and music, have passed away; the year has been marked by some terrible marine disasters, causing great loss of life; and fire, flood and storm have numbered their victims by scores and caused extensive loss of property.

The chronological table that follows gives the most important happenings of 1898, foremost among which are those of the war with Spain.

CONFLICT WITH SPAIN.

Events of the War Lately Won by the United States.

January.

25—U. S. battleship Maine, Capt. C. D. Sigsbee, U. S. N., is ordered to Havana, Cuba.

Li Hung Chang has been sent to watch the overflow of the Yellow river. This we take it, is the polite Chinese equivalent for saying that he has been sent up Salt River.

FURS ARE STYLISH.

FOUND IN BOTH INEXPENSIVE AND COSTLY SKINS.

It Is Best Not to Buy Until After the Wealthiest Have Had Their Choice, and the Furriers Begin to Reduce Prices on All Grades.

New York correspondence:

PRETTY much all the latest fashions in furs are found in both the costly and inexpensive skins, but such garments and accessories as are shown in the accompanying pictures are to be had at varying prices according to the fur from which they are made. In buying it is usually wise for a woman of limited means to get as good a fur as possible. The cheapest sorts if donned now will carry little freshness over to another season, while a really fine fur has a good degree of distinction for several years. Prices will ease up from now on, too, even in the best furs. That doesn't mean that you can buy Russian sable or sealskin for a song, but furriers will weaken on their early winter prices even for these pelts, while less expensive but good sorts will become even more reasonable. Exclusive folk, you see, pop into the latest fashions in furs at the first moment the thermometer warrants such wear, so there is little custom for the furrier from these pay-any-price folk in midwinter. Then come more moderate purchasers, securing the same grade of wares for a deal less money, and losing only the first few weeks of fashionable wear. That makes the next few weeks a good time for purchasing. Then to decide what to buy. It is not easy, for there is a variety of offerings for even the expenditure set at a moderate limit. Besides, it is possible with not more of fur than will count as an accessory to be had in sable, the fur carefully arranged that it might lie all one way, and made a stunning part of a brown tailor costume. Sometimes these jackets are made with carefully curved revers that widen at the shoulders and slope to nothing at the waist. A flat figure is helped by this finish, and the warmth of the garment is increased, but where the figure is good, the absolute plainness of the jacket hooking down the front over an under lap is part of its value.

Evidently furriers did not learn that the breast bone of this year's goose was blue, or if they did, did not believe that it meant a severe winter. This is shown by the abundance of capes that leave elbows and waist unprotected. These hardly seem a wise investment, but lots of them are worn. As to dressiness, these short capes are a sure medium for accomplishing a deal for each dollar of outlay. For the type of short cape shown in this group the expenditure will be considerable. It is fur-lined throughout, and over the lining is set a deep yoke of brocade velvet, or of cloth embroidered with chenille or trimmed with scrolls of fur. A deep edge of another fur is set around the yoke and lines the collar, which is part of the yoke. The muff matches the fur edging. Such a cape is snug and warm, and warm in very cold weather. With the mercury away down, perhaps the wearer of the high-collared fur yoke shown in today's first picture may be cold, but she won't look it, and that's a big point. She will wear under her dress waist a perfectly fitted, flannel-lined chamois jacket, and beneath her skirt knit, easily fitted tights of the heaviest wool, which are warmer than a dozen flannel petticoats, and which may reach down under the tops of her shoes, either under or over the stockings. Even if she were cold she would not show it much, nor suffer from it a great deal, for she would be supported by the thought that she possessed one of the very latest pretty notions. This yoke sets as close as a real yoke would at the back and on the shoulders, wide revers turning back making it practically double breasted in front. A perfect shower of tails, graduated in length and size, brings the fur to well below the waist. Electric seal, mink, astrakhan, Persian lamb, sealskin, chinchilla, ermine, all the popular furs, including monkey, are made up in this fashion. In many cases the little collarette is of blended furs. A lining of stone marten to the collar, for instance, adds to the becomingness of such a garment made of astrakhan or Persian lamb.

A NEW SUCCESSOR TO TAILS.

AS CAPES AND JACKETS COME.

In the most expensive fur garments there is noticeable a tendency to overelaborate. Such garments echo the styles in cloth capes and coats, and are made apart from the costume, instead of a part of it. So the fitted fur jacket of the next picture is attractive because of its simplicity. Such are made very square-shouldered, and set smartly to the waist line, short on the hips and curved down a little in front. The example sketched was harmonizes with the costume more easily than plain fur does. Some such capes are made with an under jacket attached of chamois, which is sleeveless, and that means that the wearer must submit to cold arms.

LET THE ARMS SUFFER.

Another cape of this general type is shown in another illustration. It is the garment that curves out on the shoulders and droops to the waist front and back. A yoke and collar of one fur, finished with deep edge of another, is the popular combination. If a muff is carried it matches the yoke. Ermine and sable blend prettily. One protection against cold arms is offered. It is in the form of sleeves of knit wool to slip on under. It is astonishing how much warmth such protection conveys without hurting the fit of the sleeve—or so indorsers of it declare.

The newest cape of the season is the warmest. That is unusual premium on advanced stylishness. The third garment in to-day's large picture presents a form of it that is deservedly in favor. It comes well below the hips, is easy, and laps over in front, being often finished with a jabot of fur down the front. This is practical as well as ornamental, as it prevents any of the air leaking in, even though the cape does not fasten except at the throat. This style is the one popular for all occasions. It is made in the most elaborate styles, rich furs alternating with each other in full frills, or one magnificent piece of fur making the sweep of the garment edged with a frill of another fur. There is a high collar and often the cloak is lined with another fur. These garments vary greatly in elaboration, but they all fit closely over the shoulders, below which all variation comes. From tip of collar to over the shoulders the set and fur must be unbroken. Often they are made of velvet—black, royal blue or brown—lined with a choice fur, the jabot down the front and the inside of the collar being of the fur. The model is charmingly graceful, but it distinctly belongs to the young matron and to the dowager. The young woman may admire its beauty, but she'd better content herself with other fashionable types.

Despite a plenty of new capes and cloaks, the handsome fur jacket of standard cut holds its own, and holds its wearer snug and warm, too. All jackets are close fitting, usually have rounded corners and show very little fullness in the back. Lapels turned back take from the severity of fit in front. Persian lamb is the favorite material, though seal, Alaska, "China," "electric" and "American," are all popular. Velvet jackets of this sort lined with fur, and finished with fur collar and revers, are still much worn, but remember that a shield front means last season.

Subscriber—How is it that you have printed that long poem three times in your columns? Editor—Well, really, I didn't suppose anyone would find it out.—Fliegende Blatter.

"I understand you want to hire a housemaid?" "That must be a mistake. I do all my own work." "Too bad! It would be just the sort of place that I'd like."—Heitere Welt.

Stubbly (with conviction)—I don't believe in that young doctor. Nurse—Why not? Stubbly—Well, the medicine he gives doesn't taste bad enough to do any good.—Boston Globe.

Looking Forward.—Mrs. Noear—Do you think my daughter will be a musician? Professor—I gant zay. She may. She dell me she gome of a long-lived family.—New York Weekly.

"My impression is," oracularly began the tall boarder, "that Spain is going to cede——" "It would be more correct," interrupted the solemn boarder, "to say she has gone to seed."—Judge.

Miss Sheafe—Oh! just look at that wheat rising and falling in the breeze. How beautiful it is. Mr. Cityman—Ah, but you ought to see it rising and falling in the corn exchange.—Tid-Bits.

"Before we were married you used to write me three letters a day." "Did I, really?" "Yes, you did; and now you get angry just because I ask you to write me a little bit of a check."—Tid-Bits.

Jones (leaving for Europe)—When I'm in Rome I'll do as the Romans do. Smith—Indeed you won't. You'll do as the Americans do—pay twice as much for everything as anyone else would.—Puck.

"Here, boy," said the man, "throw away that cigarette and smoke a cigar." "Yassef," replied the urchin. "Say, mister, I got a whole pack of cigarettes in me pocket."—Philadelphia North American.

A Matrimonial Venture.—Blinkers—Hello, Winkers. I hear you married a woman with an independent fortune. Winkers (sadly)—N-o; I married a fortune with an independent woman.—New York Weekly.

"Since Mrs. Black has been a widow," he suggested, "it seems to me she looks younger." "Of course," she replied. "It is more necessary now that she should." Thus do women betray each other.—Chicago Post.

"I understand you won the blue ribbon, so to speak, in the examination for the civil service." "I—ah—would hardly call it that," answered the mild young man. "Let us say I won the red tape."—Indianapolis Journal.

"Now that you have lost your job as surgeon in the regiment, what do you expect to do?" "Oh, I'm all right. I've opened up a little office just around the corner from a foot-ball-playing college."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"I am always grateful to my parents for the musical education they gave me," said Willie Washington. "But you never sing." "No. Thanks to my thoughtful parents, I know enough about music not to try."—Washington Star.

Jack—Let's play house. I'll be the father and you be the mother. Dolly—Yes, and I'll come to you and ask you for money to buy a new dress. Jack—Yes, there you go! That's just you! You always want to do something to raise a fight.—Puck.

"Mamma," said little Freddie one evening, "may I go out on the street with the other boys and look at the comet?" "No, dear," replied his mother; "I'm afraid you might get hurt." "No, I won't, mamma," he answered; "I won't go any ways near it."—Buffalo News.

Hattie—Then we went to Scotland, it is perfectly wonderful the way they talk the dialect. Uncle George—Why wonderful? Hattie—I should think they'd forget now and then and drop into English. I often do when I'm reciting Burns or playing golf.—Boston Transcript.

"Yes," the fair young girl went on, "We are engaged, but I do not think I should have accepted him if he had not proposed in such a delightful manner." "What did he say?" "He asked if I would permit him to add an engagement ring to my collection."—Harper's Bazar

ISSUED EVERY FRIDAY.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.,

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 17.....1899

The Riverside press reproduces the comment of the San Jose Mercury and Express on the proposal to abolish the poll tax and adds:

"Assemblyman Mead of Los Angeles has introduced a bill which provides for the levy and collection of a poll tax, but also provides that every citizen who presents evidence of having voted at any general election shall be exempt from paying it. That is putting a premium on the excersise of the right of cttizenship, and it might be well to add the provision that electors who do not vote shall pay a $4 tax instead of $2"

The criticism of the Mercury and the Express was directed, not against the poll tax itself but against the amount of partiality shown in the enforcement of the law, and the methods of collecting the tax. Comparatively few good citizens object to the poll tax as an institution, and as a public revenue producer; and if the law were impartially and decently enforced the number of complaints would be very small. There is great merit in the bill introduced by Assemblyman Mead, which, as the Express says, "puts a premium on the exercise of the rights of citizenship." If enacted into law it would doubtless tend to largely increase the vote in all State elections, and the additions would come mostly from classes of citizens who are now too indifferent regarding their political duties. There is reason to believe that the results would accrue in the direction of good government, for, as every body knows, the political indifference of reputable citizens is responsible in no small degree for the existing evils and abuses in government and politics. Besides, if a man can make $2 by doing his duty, so much the better. Such a law would, of course, diminish to some extent the school revenues derived from the poll tax; but this would be partly compensated for if a penalty were exacted for non-voting. A $4 fine is not to be regarded with satisfaction. In Colorado the law provides that when a man fails to vote in any regular election, he must appear before an election board and show cause why he did not exercise the franchise. If he does not appear, or cannot offer a good excuse, his name is stricken from the registration list, and he cannot vote until he has re-registered. The plan works fairly well, but it does not offer the inducements contained in Assemblyman Mead's bill.

Senatar Smith of Kern some time since introduced a bill authorizing women to vote at school elections and defining the qualifications of such voters. The bill should become a law. No good reason can be advanced why the suffrage should not be extended to women on educational questions at least. A plea will be made against this extension of the suffrage on the ground that if women have this much granted they will at the next session of the Legislature demand that suffrage be given them equal to men. What if they do? What if they succeed? They certainly cannot make the filthy pool any filthier. They might even to some extent cleanse and purify it. At any rate, no matter what else may be granted them, the women have as much interest in good schools as have the men, and probably more. In justice they should be permitted to vote for educational officers, and the law should sanctify what justice demands.

Senate bill 499 is intended to blot out the slot machine gaming devices. Pass it in a hurry. The things, nine out of ten, are cheats and deceits. Arrange the mechanical device as fairly as is possible; let it be ever so correct and true; let it operate as fairly for one as for another; still it will be a gambling machine, a device in which the machine proprietor is bound to win and the players as a whole are bound to lose. It is a stimulant to gaming, it is a lottery on the machine plan, and the law and the Constitution put their seal of condemnation upon the lottery. If legislation will do it, by all means smash the nickel-in-the-slot machines. The bill in question has one especially sensible provision, namely, it makes it the duty of all peace officers to enforce the law. It is not proposed that it shall become a dead letter by reason of no one considering it his duty to enforce it.

The spectacle of American troops waging war on the Filipinos will create no enthusiasm among the people of the United States. There is everywhere a disinclinaiion to permit of the territory involved in the late war returning to Spain, but there is no demand among right thinking people for a war for conquest with those islanders who are struggling for liberty. To them all masters are alike, and their attitude toward America is just what might have been expected to follow the policy of the administration.

General Miles need not regret the coarseness of the attacks the beef trust has made upon him. Such assaults as those made by Eagan and the New York Sun convince the people of the villainous nature of the men who carried out the conspiracy to enrich themselves by poisoning our troops with rotten beef. The rascals have been caught in their frauds, and the more they howl the more certain will be the people that they are guilty.

Two years ago the Legislature passed the Belshaw act limiting the number of legislative attaches that could be legally employed. This session the bars were promptly let down and now the pay roll is as large as formerly, footing about $950 per day. The repeal of the Belshaw act was the first bill passed by the Republican Legislature and the first to be signed by Governor Gage.

THE COMING GOWNS.

Ruffles, Ruchings, Puffs, Tucks, Etc., Mark the Dressy Summer Costume.

The modes of making and trimming the bodice are very nearly on the old lines. The sleeves are simply a little smaller, and while the skirt has acquired a reputation for shifting methods of construction the simple gored skirt with five or seven gores and less fullness is still very popular. Of course, a skirt trimming of some sort is almost a necessity, but it is an easy matter to supply this with rows of ribbon gathered or sewed on plain, ruches of chiffon, net or silk and milliner's folds or stitched bands of silk or satin.

The organdie, lawn and pique gowns displayed as new models are more or less elaborately trimmed with ruffles, ruches, insertions, puffs and tucks, quite like the old dresses of 30 years ago. Insertions of lace, alternating with groups of tucks or narrow ruches from the hem nearly to the waist, are one of the many fancies, while there is apparently no limit to the possibilities of gathered satin ribbon in the narrow widths.

The prettiest ruffled skirts are the grenadines ruffled with lace and chiffon and the organdies, which are very quaint, decked out in ruffles more effectively arranged by separating them two or three inches. The skirt, with one wide circular flounce set into the apron shaped upper part, is already so common that, according to all previous rulings of fashion, it must soon have a downfall.

Black mousseline de soie frills, ruchings and plaitings in very narrow widths give a very Parisian air to the dressy gowns, and there is no end to the way of using them. A touch of black is a conspicuous feature of dress in general. Even the cotton gowns are trimmed with ruches of black tulle.

The prevailing style of bodice in thin gowns is the plain back with a little fullness at the belt, a medium blouse front and the guimpe neck of white chiffon or lawn tucked and trimmed with lace insertion. The sleeves may be of white, too, if you like. A frill of lace, embroidered batiste, or ruches of the muslin finish the shoulders. The New York Sun, from which the foregoing items of fashion are gathered, illustrates a dressy muslin gown. It has a puffed yoke and shows a series of narrow ruches on the skirt, edging the front of the bodice and striping the sleeves. A wide sash of back chiffon is the striking feature of this gown.

Cream of Spinach Soup.

The Ladies' Home Journal gives this recipe for cream of spinach, a somewhat unusual soup: Pick the leaves from the stems of two quarts of spinach, wash through several cold waters, shake lightly to free from sand, and throw them into a warm kettle; there will be sufficient water remaining on the leaves to create steam for the cooking. Shake and toss for about five minutes. Drain the spinach; chop it very fine, and then press it through a sieve. Add gradually, stirring all the while, one quart of cold milk. The mixture should have the consistency of thin cream and be of a bright green color. Put in a double boiler, moisten a teaspoonful of arrowroot or half a tablespoonful of cornstarch with a little cold milk; add to the soup; stir until boiling, strain through a sieve; add half a teaspoonful of salt, and just as you turn it into the tureen add a tablespoonful of butter broken into bits.

Two Sunshades Just From Paris.

One of large size is covered with black lace having an applique of the richest silk embroidery in relief, representing roses and foliage. Inside this is lined with bouillonnees of black chiffon, the handle of wood tinted to go with the embroidery. The other is larger than we have been accustomed to, dome shaped, the ground dark blue with festoons of gayly striped silk all round.

Ordinance No. 64.

The Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo, State of California, Do Ordain As Follows:

SECTION 1. Every male person over the age of twenty-one and under fifty-five years of age, found in each Road District in the County of Inyo, State of California, between the first day of March, 1899, and the thirty first day of December, 1899, excepting all persons who were honorably discharged from service in the army or navy of the United States, at any time between the first day of April, in the year A. D. 1861, and the first day of September, A. D. 1865, and who have not paid the same in some other road district, must pay to the said County of Inyo, a Road Poll Tax of Two Dollars provided the same be paid before the first Monday in July, but if not paid prior to the first Monday in July then it shall be Three Dollars.

SECTION 2. Said Road Poll Tax shall be collected by the Assessor of the said County of Inyo, in the same manner that State Poll Taxes are collected, and shall be paid to the Treasurer of the said County of Inyo, and shall be placed to the credit of the several Road Districts of the said County of Inyo from which said Road Poll Tax was collected.

SECTION 3. This ordinance shall take effect and be in force from and after fifteen days from its passage, and all Ordinances and parts of ordinances of said Board in conflict herewith, are hereby repealed.

SECTION 4. This ordinance shall be published with the names of the members of said Board of Supervisors voting for and against the same, in the Inyo Independent, a newspaper published in the said County of Inyo, at least one week; said publication to be made for said time and before the expiration of said fifteen days.

A. C. FREEMAN,
Chairman of the Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo, State of California.

{SEAL}

Attest: D. J. HESSION,
Clerk of said Board of Supervisors.

The above and foregoing ordinance, No. 60, was duly passed, enacted and ordained by the Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo, State of California, at a regular meeting of said Board on the 5th day of January, 1899, by the following vote:

Ayes: N. J. Cooley, Jas. Jones, T. H. Henebry. J. J. Stewart, A. C. Freeman.

SUPERIOR COURT PROCEEDINGS.

Hon. Walter A. Lamar, Judge.

THURSDAY, FEB. 16, 1899.

William Ritchey vs. James Pruett et al.—Demurrer of defendant overruled.

W. L. Coats vs. Hillside water Co.—Trial of cause continued indefinitely.

Estate of Edwin M. Crocker, deceased— Return and account of sales of real estate confirmed. Sales confirmed.

A. O. Collins is visiting in town.

Crom. Harper has gone on a prospecting trip to Mazourka.

Dr. J. S. McQueen returned home to Bishop Thurday's train.

Mr. anp Mrs. George Reinhakel were down from Big Pine on Tuesday.

Thos. Webb returned home Monday evening from a trip to San Francisco.

Mrs. F. Rhine left for San Francisco on Thursday's train. She expects to be gone about a month.

The beautiful weather still continues. There is scarcely any frost nights, and grass is growing rapidly.

Phil Cartier came down from Mazourka yesterday, returning to-day. He is doing very well dry-washing.

Mrs. W. A. Lamar left on Thursday morning for San Jose where she will spend some time visiting relatives.

Inyo Lodge, No. 221, F. & A. M. will hold a public installation of officers tomorrow evening, followed by a social dance.

R. Hession, accompanied by his daughter, Mrs. V. G. Smith, are visiting with County Clerk Hession at Independence.

The jury impaneled to try the case of Coats vs. Hillside Water Co. was discharged, owing to sickness among parties at Bishop.

George McCaffrey was brought to Independence last Monday suffering from acute mania. He has been in ill health for same time past, and his faculties have become deranged. Owing to some kink in the law he cannot be examined for committment to an asylum, and in consequence he is in charge of a keeper at the expense of the county.

Assemblyman Mack introduced a bill which has become a law providing for the levying of taxes by unincorporated towns and villages for the maintenance of a fire department. It provides that the matter be left to a majority vote, and the chronic obstructor who lives in every community will have to bear his share of the burden of general protection.

Arthur M. Squires and E. Newman arrived at Independence last Monday from Los Angeles and went to Mazourka Canyon next day. Mr. Newman has spent considerable time studying the Mazourka district and has some theories which he hopes to verify. There is certainly a vast amount of placer gold in that district and some economical means of securing it will doubtless be evolved.

We are confronted with a peculiar situation relative to insane people. The law requires that commitments of insane persons to State institutions must be signed by two physicians who possess certain reduired credentials. The only physicians in the county who possess them are Drs. Woodin and Blair, the former of whom is temporarily absent. The Stockton Asylum Superintendent by telegraph has stated that there is no deviation from the rule.

To The Public.

During the many years we have been doing business with you we have never made a practice of advertising fake sales. We have concluded to make ome important changes in our business, and in consequence offer our entire stock at actual cost for cash. This sale will continue for ninety days and will be without reserve. This is an opportunity never before offered the people of Inyo and should be taken advantage of. At the end of the time specified we shall announce some radical changes in our business. Thanking you for the generous patronage you have accorded us and soliciting its continuance, we remain,

Yours Respectfully,
N. RHINE.

Big Pine News.

BIG PINE, February 14, 1899.

ED. INDEPENDENT:

The Valentine mark of the Big Pine almanac did not pass unheeded at the hamlet. The little church—the pride of saint and sinner— was aglow tonight enjoying a season of reviving grace. Rev. A. L. Hazlett, pastor of the aforesaid little church, has been presenting the truth to the hamleters in nightly installments for the last week, and if he can convince the old-timers that an hour's diversion from pedro, whist and "draw" will never fit the moral law, he will have accomplished a task left over by his predecessor and one smacking a little of the impossible.

To-night our people were treated to a musical and literary surprise in the matter of an entertainment at Educational hall by Miss Clara Eldred. While the entire program was rendered to the complete satisfaction of the audience several decided hits were made, notably the following:

Three Old Maids of Lee, Rene Spratt, Ella Roughney, and Lois Hall.
Three Little Dasies—Edie Bedford, Mildred Munn and Ruth Roughney.
Three Little Sailor Boys—Earl Woods, Irving Joseph and Wesley Newman.
My First Music Lesson—Lois Hall.
Solo, "What Did Dewey Do?"—Wesley Newman.
Quartette, "Come Where the Lilies Bloom"—Clara, Oro, Winnie and Dick Eldred.

"The Topsy-turvey Chorus" by the combined juvenile talent clinched the musical feature as a surprising treat.

"The Horse-race Fifty Years Ago in The South", a difficult recitation, was rendered by Miss Oro Eldred in a manner which convinced her hearers that she may gain fame as a powerful speaker. "Church At Kehoe's Bar" by Miss Clara Eldred, was heartily appreciated by the audience. Young Dick Eldred's rendition of Parson Snowball's sermon, "The Ship of Faith", was a screaming success.

The audience contained Recorder Hession, Ivan Bunney and Avah Bell of the Capital who seemed to enjoy the entertainment hugely. The Misses Eldred, George and Freeman Mitchell volunteered "sole-inspiring" strains and the "light fantastic" was tripped until the first chicken-crow heralded the first anniversary of the incident which led Dewey to do what he could to avenge the Maine and her men.

La Grippe still keeps gripping the Whites and the noble Redmen of the hamlet. Quite a number of severe cases have appeared here, but Dr. Middleton by proper prescribing and careful nursing has cured all cases thus far.

Elton Baker, Willie Baker and L. W. Barnaby are prospecting a quartz ledge near the Baker ranch which bids fair to develop into a paying proposition.

The young braves of Big Pine are still talking "hoss-race" for the 22nd of Washington. There will be a hop here at that time. The old Union Veterans will entertain their friends at Bishop on Tuesday evening, February 21st. While we very properly drop into the "back number groove" in the every-day, daily duty line, yet bear with us a few more years on special occasions, for it will not be long until we cease from troubling and the G. A. R. button "will but point moral or adorn a tale."

Respectfully,
SWAMPER.

Typhilitis.

A description of the symptoms of this disease may prove of value and interest. Typhilitis is an acute or chronic inflamation of the caecum or ascending colon and frequently of the vermiform appendix. In the latter case it is known as appendicitis. Peri-typhilitis is an acute inflamation external to the caecum and in the surrounding connecting tissue, usually resulting in the formation of pus and giving all the symptoms of a large abscess. Both forms present the appearance and symptoms of localized peritonitis with fever and evidence of intestinal obstruction. There is local pain with extreme tenderness over the right iliac fossa with swelling and distention from gases. The patient lies in an attitude to relax the muscles. There may be constipation or diarrhoea or the two conditions may alternate. The fever is generally high and constitutional disturbance is considerable. There will be found vomiting in the majority of cases, and if the obstruction to the bowel is complete the vomiting will become stercoraceous. If the obstruction continues for a long time we are likely to have ulceration and perforation, giving rise to general peritonitis which usually ends fatally.

The Green Monster.

C. H. Jorden and Phil Deidesheimer arrived at Independence on Wednesday's train from San Francisco. The former has a bond on the old Green-eyed Monster near Citrus, and the latter is an old time Virginia City mining expert and is examining the property. The two gentlemen in company with J. C. Roeper spent yesterday and to day at the mine. The Green Monster is a relic of early days. There are big copper indications on the surface and a man named Wingard located the ground, ran a tunnel about three hundred feet, and several cross-cuts, and sunk a shaft about ninety feet. He then patented the property, which later became the property of one Riddell, who still owns it. It has lain idle for over twenty years. Mr. Deidersheimer says the ledge never was struck in the cross-cuts or tunnel, and there is certainly nothing in sight under ground. The surface indications are great, and the chances are that intelligent prospecting would develop a valuable property.

To The School Teachers of The 60th Assembly District.

The following resolutions were adopted at the last meeting of General John A. Logan Post No. 180, G. A. R., of Bishop, California.

Whereas, on many occasions it has been demonstrated that a majority of the native born American citizens are not familiar with our national hymn, "America", and other patriotic American songs, therefore be it

Resolved, by Gen. John A. Logan Post No 180, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of California and Nevada, that we believe the true spirit of patriotism demands that the words and music of our national patriotic songs be so lastingly impressed on the mind of the rising and coming generation that they may never be erased therefrom.

Resolved, That the teachers of the day schools in the 60th Assembly District, comprising Alpine, Inyo and Mono counties, be and are hereby requested to devote a part of the music hour of at least one day in each school week in teaching the words and music of Amertcan National patriotic songs, and particularly of the National hymn, "America."

Resolved, that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the several different papers being published in the District with a request for publication.

The Plow a Back Number.

H. W. Collingwood, in an address at the recent meeting of the New Jersey State Horticultural society, remarked: I believe that a great many farmers and fruit growers have come to the conclusion that the old fashioned plow is a back number. On my farm I plowed only two acres last year and I was sorry I did that. On a light sandy loam the cutaway harrow does better work than the plow, because we do not want to plow so deep. Our land has been plowed to death. We use the disk harrow and the ordinary cutaway harrow, instead of the plow. We concluded that there was something the matter with our soil, or with the wood ashes, as it did not bring a good crop. My experience has convinced me that the ashes contain lime and that the stable manure is alkaline, which acts contrary to the solubles in the soil. I don't believe in turning it from the bottom side up. I believe that those disks and cutaway harrows are better than plows.

Fertilizer Facts.

It is a well known fact that practically all the mixed fertilizers sold in Ohio are made of three materials, tankage, acid phosphate and muriate of potash. Tankage is a waste product of the great slaughtering establishments, being the settlings in the tanks in which the scraps and offal are rendered to extract their grease. These settlings are dried and ground into a fine meal, and either sold direct for fertilizing purposes or first mixed with other materials.

Tankage, like bone meal, is useful as a carrier of both ammonia and phosphoric acid. It differs from bone in carrying a larger percentage of ammonia (6 to 10) and a smaller proportion of phosphoric acid.

The phosphoric acid of both bone and tankage is somewhat slower in action than that of acid phosphate, but when finely ground it soon becomes available by decay in the soil.—Ohio Station Bulletin.

Blessings In Disguise.

Yellows and borers are blessings to successful growers, and they are likely to be always with us. As soon as the first signs of yellows appear cut out the trees and burn them. For the borers wash with lime, potash and crude carbolic acid, but look over the trees, spring and fall, and dig out any borers that may be found. Rot may be held in check by the use of bordeaux mixture, but it must be applied early in the spring before the buds swell and used two-thirds as strong later, when the peaches are two-thirds grown. Pick off the rotten fruits, place in a bag and burn. The curculios are a blessing, as they destroy the crop of the man who does not look after them, and this will make more demand for ours. The best way is to jar them from the trees upon cloth screens. With 50 men I have been able to jar the curculio from 50,000 trees daily, getting over the orchard in two days. By keeping it up for seven weeks I secured 50 cars of first class fruit, each of which netted $500, while an adjoining orchard that was not jarred gave 18 cars of second class fruit that only netted $300.—J. H. Hale in American Agriculturist.

DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

The Country Clergyman.

An old clergyman who had held a cure in the depths of the country for the greater part of his life had occasion to consult his bishop on a certain matter, and, in answer to his letter, received an invitation to sleep the night at the palace. For 40 or 50 years he had practically led the life of a recluse, and it was after many cogitations that he decided to take the journey to the other end of the diocese, where the bishop lived. He arrived just in time for 5 o'clock tea, a meal to which he was a complete stranger.

After tea the bishop asked him to accompany him to evensong. When they returned to the house, the bishop, remarking that it was quite time they went up stairs, lit a candle and showed his guest to his room. It was then just 7 o'clock, and, though the old clergyman thought it was rather early to retire, still, admiring the bishop for such simple habits, he prepared for bed. He had just put out the light and lain down to sleep, wishing he had drunk a little more tea, when a booming noise rang through the house and smote upon his ear.

Quick as thought he sprang from his bed and, shouting "Fire!" at the top of his voice, rushed out on to the landing just in time to meet the bishop, with a lady on his arm, going down to dinner. The sequel to the story has never been divulged.—Cornhill Magazine.

No household is complete without a bottle of the famous Jesse Moore Whiskey. It is a pure and wholesome stimulant recommended by all physicians. Don't neglect this necessity.

A Lost Opportunity.

It was near one of the large railroad stations. A man rather advanced in years, whose old fashioned attire and open mouthed wonderment proclaimed that he was a visitor from the rural districts and not accustomed to the every day sights of a large city, was suddenly accosted by a sharp visaged youth with, "Mister, yer dropped yer wallick." As he spoke he held forth a large wallet well stuffed with old revenue stamps covered with a couple of dollar bills.

Uncle Rube looked at the greenbacks bulging out of the wallet with equally protruding eyes, hesitated just one moment, and then, his cupidity evidently getting the better of him, reached for it. "Hold on; give us a tenner furst," exclaimed the possessor of the wallet.

The old man quickly put his hand in his trousers pocket; but, after a moment, drawing forth his empty hand, he drawled out, "Take it out o' the wallet."

The youth, closing the wallet with ill concealed disgust, turned on his heel and hurried off. The stranger in town looked after the youth a moment, and then, muttering, "Gol dern! Missed it ag'in. I told Sal I'd need more'n $3," he resumed his peaceful way.—Philadelphia Record.

~M'GINNIS THE COOK.~

WE had been at work on a survey in the Bitter Root Mountains since early in the spring, and the autumn had found us all disgusted and homesick—all but McGinnis, the cook. Besides, we were famishing for news. Our mail and the late papers and magazines should have been sent to us every two weeks, but for nearly two months nothing had been seen of the old trapper who acted as mail-carrier, and no messenger or message of any kind had reached us from the outside world.

Every day we exacted from the cook a promise that he would bring our letters out to us in case the carrier should arrive while we were at work on the line. Then we would watch impatiently till evening and hurry back to camp, more than half expecting that the post had come in spite of the non-appearance of McGinnis. Expectancy was torturing us. Disappointments repeated every evening for several weeks deeply affected the spirits of the party. We became restless and unsociable. We tried to imagine what had happened out in the world since we had lost touch with it, and each feared that some one dear to him had been seized by illness or had met with misfortune. We worried and fretted and tormented ourselves with impatience.

One night after supper we lounged on our damp beds, ten of us in one tent, waiting for bed time. The work of the day had been unusually hard and the hours long. We were too leg-weary and heavy of spirit to do anything but the little patching that was regularly necessary and to lounge.

McGinnis came over from the cook tent to tell us one of his tales of forty years ago. His stories possessed one rare quality. They were reminiscent of the wild life of the mountains in the earlier days, but McGinnis played no prominent part in any of them. We were all curious to learn something about the old man, but our curiosity was never satisfied. Frequently as a story in which he figured gave promise of showing his younger self put to a test of strength or of courage, he would break off suddenly or change the entire trend of his story. But he enjoyed spinning his yarns, and our silence of late had afforded him the opportunity.

"Well, I see yous are the same merry crowd as ever," he said, cheerily, as he took the only chair in the tent. "But which of you is it that's comin' up the slope yonder, I'd like to know?"

Several of us looked at him wonderingly. Those who were busy paid no attention whatever.

The camp dog stretched, went lazily to the opening, then grew suddenly alert and began to bark. Almost instantly ten heads were crowded between the tent flaps.

Sure enough, some one whom we could not see clearly in the dim light was coming up the valley. It was evidently a man, following the line of our survey higher up the mountain slope, though only a short distance away.

We finally fell over one another in our sudden excitement. Every one seemed moved by the same impulse. A half-dozen pairs of wet and worn-out boots disappeared from the passage between the two rows of bunks at the same instant. Some one ran out and shouted to attract attention. Then everybody else shouted, because there was suddenly shouting in the soul of each.

McGinnis went quietly and lighted the fire he had laid for morning in the cook stove. The head chainman made a place near the tent opening for another bed.

The rodman and the "stake-artist" fell to wrestling, and rolled about in the tent and then out of it with most unexpected agility and high spirits.

A voice said it was not the old mail-carrier, and we became still more curious. Not a member of the party doubted that it was some one bringing our mail.

Two or three of the boys went to meet the newcomer, and the rest of us, half ashamed of the eagerness we had shown, went back into the tent, threw ourselves down on the beds and assumed attitudes of indifference.

We heard McGinnis calling: "Come over to the cook-tent and eat before the boys start you to talkin'; they'll never let you stop after."

"I've e't," a strange voice answered.

We inside sat up again, our anticipation reawakened. A short, heavy-set, square-jawed man, without grub-pack or blankets, limped painfully into the tent and sat down on one of the beds. He was evidently much travel-worn, but his small, bead-like eyes were intensely bright, and their glance from one to another of us was rapid and searching.

"Didn't you bring any mail?" asked the rodman, abruptly.

We all looked at the stranger eagerly and waited.

"No," he answered, in a disinterestedly calm voice that lingered unpleasantly in our ears.

The stranger felt in the inside of his pocket.

"Only a letter I found in the trail at the last creek crossing," he said, quietly, as he again searched us with his small, restless eyes.

"It's for some one named Patrick McGinnis," he continued, holding up an unopened letter.

"Do you know him?"

The old man reached for his letter and silently held it to the light of the nearest candle. Then we all saw that it was crumpled and deeply stained.

"Widout my spectacles, it looks like blood on it," said McGinnis, slowly.

"I thought it was blood, too, and fresh," said the stranger.

"The trail was torn up near where I found it, and the bushes beat down. I hunted without finding anything; but my foot was so lame I couldn't get far through the brush."

There was a sudden movement in the tent, but no one spoke. The boys shook out their coats and put them on. Every one understood what was to be done. Those who owned rifles took them down and provided themselves with cartridges. Every weapon in camp was hurriedly put in readiness for use.

The chief of the party had come over from the instrument tent when our guest arrived.

"What kind of tracks were there?" he now asked.

"I couldn't make out," the stranger answered.

"Take the lanterns and plenty of candles," said the chief. "And, Turner, you stay to watch camp."

"I'll stay, too," said the stranger; "I'm too lame to travel. You'll have no trouble finding the place."

"I'll stay and read my letter," announced McGinnis, quietly, to the surprise of every one, for old Morton, the trapper, had been a friend of his in the earlier days.

A moment later only the stranger and Turner were left at the sleeping-tent. The searching party was well down the valley, and McGinnis had gone to the cook-tent. Presently he came back with his hat and spectacles on.

"It's from my little granddaughter," he said to the stranger, as he opened the letter. "Would you mind readin' it to me? My eyes was never much at handwritin'."

The man read it—a child's note of only a few labored lines, chiefly words of love, but he read it unsteadily, for the cook held a lighted candle before his face, and whenever he glanced up from the page the old man's eyes were intently fixed upon him.

"Ah, it's bad business—bad business!" repeated the cook, as he put away his candle. "Now 'at I know what's in the letter, I think I'll go on down an' help find out what it all means—all this blood, here."

Turner grew uneasy after the old man had gone. The stranger said little, but he watched his companion closely and waited till the sounds of the cook's footsteps had died out in the distance. Then he got up, and without limping walked to the tent opening. After standing there a moment he whistled and sudenly turned upon Turner with a drawn revolver.

"Keep still and walk outside," he said, quietly.

Turner obeyed promptly. He had no weapon with which to defend himself, and he was badly frightened.

In a few moments a second stranger, lean, raw-boned and taller than the first, came out of the brush leading two horses, one saddled, the other bearing a pack. The rising moon shed but a dim light along the mountain side; yet Turner saw at a glance that the animals were the old mail-carrier's.

"They bit easy," said the shorter man, with a low laugh. "There's no one at camp but this. Now hurry."

The last arrival emptied the grips and bags and selected whatever was of value. He also took a couple of pairs of blankets and all the ammunition the boys had left behind them. Then he began to make a pack of what he had taken.

"Never mind that," said his companion. "Go over and lay out all the grub you can."

The tall stranger went to the cook-tent. The other knelt down, laid his revolver on the ground, kept his eye constantly on Turner, and made a roll of what the first had put down.

When he had cinched this onto the pack-horse he marched Turner before him to the cook-tent.

The flaps of the tent were slightly parted, but there was no light inside, and everything was quiet. He stopped before the opening, gave Turner the bridle reins and made him keep his hands above his head while at the same time he held the horses.

"Hurry up with the stuff," he exclaimed, looking into the darkness of the tent. He waited a moment, and, getting no answer, pushed aside the flaps and started to enter.

But he had put only one foot inside when the sound of a heavy blow was heard, and with a muffled cry he fell forward on his face.

Instantly McGinnis emerged from the tent, and the surprised Turner saw him drag out both strangers, almost together, and dexterously bind their hands and feet. A new vigor had come into the old man's frame, a new alertness. There were purpose and positiveness in his every movement as he went about his task.

When the men were secure he looked at Turner. The latter suddenly came to himself and put down his hands. McGinnis took the weapons from his prisoners before they regained consciousness, and with Turner's help got them into the sleeping tent, where there were lighted candles.

"I never liked this one's looks," McGinnis said, by way of explanation, as he wiped the blood from the face of the man who had brought the letter. "He looks like he'd set a bait for you, an' that's why I wint away an' come back unbeknownce to 'em. I seen 'em whin I got to the cook-tent, and whin they come over I was waitin' for 'em wid the bear-trap, the only thing I could find."

Both men soon returned to consciousness, and after an effort to free themselves they sat in dogged silence.

In about half an hour several of the searching party returned with our pouch of mail, but most of the letters had been opened, and many of them were torn and almost destroyed. Soon after, others came, accompanied by three or four strangers, carrying a limp form, which they laid carefully upon one of the beds.

The prisoners looked on intently and with unmistakable signs of fear.

Morton, our mail-carrier, had been shot in the back, and, though dangerously wounded, was still living.

"Is he dead?" asked the smaller prisoner.

At the sound of his voice Morton, with a convulsive effort, sat up and put his hand to his side as if to draw his revolver, but it was not there.

The men who had come back with the party relieved the old cook of his prisoners and took them out to civilization. They were deputy sheriffs, part of a large posse that for nearly a week had followed the trail of the two desperadoes.

The old mail-carrier, unavoidably delayed, had fallen in their way when they were hard pressed for means of escape, and they had shot him for his horses. Then, learning from the letters of our presence in the neighborhood, they had played at a bold game to obtain provisions and had lost.

We felt that we knew McGinnis better after that.—Chicago Record.

A FOOT-BALL STORY.

The Player Performed a Great Feat, but Didn't Know It.

Harper's Round Table contains a capital football story, in which the following vivid description of the sensations of a contestant in a game between the Harvard and Yale teams is given by one of the Harvard players:

As the play was started I was shot forward, tipping the opposing guard completely over, and we all went down together. I can only remember scrambling savagely over two men, jumping wildly from one man to another, with the ball just ahead of me under the legs of what seemed to be a thousand people. Then I heard a wild, unearthly yell. Nothing like it had ever come to my ears before, and I remember wondering what it could be. It swelled and grew with each moment. Now it died away; now it spread out stronger than ever. I had a queer feeling of wonder if I were still playing the game. Nobody seemed to be near. Then a black-faced, fierce-looking figure rose up in front of me. I must get out of his way at any cost. I moved aside and thrust my open hand straight into his face, caught his hair and ear, and scrambled all over him. He seemed to be the only one out of the game except myself, and the maddening feeling that I had made some mistake lent me the strength to throw him rolling away on the ground.

There was that same wild, exultant yell again. It swept over the field as I have seen a cloud of dust sweep up a street. And then all in a moment I knew the cocaine had given out and my strength was gone. I got a swinging blow on the head, and lay quietly down with the feeling that I was tired out.

Still there seemed to be no explanation for my being alone, and I started to get up, saying between my teeth, "Get 'em low, Jim, get 'em low!"

"Oh, Jimmy, my boy! Jimmy! Jimmy!" cried a voice, and an arm went round my neck and lifted me up.

"Low, Jack, l-o-w!"

"Oh, Jimmy," said Jack himself, holding me up, "it's over, and—look at the crowd!"

I could scarcely see, but over to the right somewhere there was a wave of red color that swung back and forth. Then I looked up at the faces about me, and they wavered, too.

"Peter," I cried, with tears rolling down my cheeks—for the life of me I couldn't help it—"Peter, get me up! I'm all right. We'll stop 'em yet. They can't get over that line."

"He's gone," said somebody; "he's mixed. Take him over to the house." But I couldn't let them take me off now. It was too critical a time.

"Why don't they go on with the game? I'm all right, I tell you."

"Go on, man, go on? Why, don't you know where you are?"

I looked up and saw goal posts over my head, and the next instant there was another wild, wavering cheer and a ball went sailing over the cross-bar.

"What is it, Farragut?" I asked.

"Good heavens," said some one near by, "he doesn't know! Why, man, you've run the 130 yards of the field through the whole team, and that's a goal from the touchdown!"

The Origin of Scalping.

At the annual meeting of the Baltimore Folk Lore Society Miss Alice C. Fletcher gave an interesting contribution in a paper entitled "The Significance of the Scalp Lock; a Study of the Omaha Tribe." The Omaha Indians, like many other tribes, have peculiar ideas regarding a continuity of life and a kind of spiritual link between animate and inanimate objects. They believe a piece of any article connects them with the entirety. The hair is thought to have a close connection with life, and one possessing it may work his will upon whoever or whatever the hair belonged to. From this idea came the custom of scalping enemies.—Boston Evening Transcript.

Quinine in India.

There was a time when the government of India had to import annually $250,000 worth of quinine and did not get enough of it even then. After a great many experiments the cultivation of the cinchona tree was made successful in India, and now there are 4,000,000 trees in Bengal, and every rural postoffice in India sells a five-grain packet of the drug for half a cent, while the government makes from $2,000 to $3,500 a year out of the profits.

SERMONS OF THE WEEK

A Bad Bargain.—It is a bad bargain to enter business without God.—Rev. C. S. Mason, Gospel Union, Los Angeles, Cal.

Unitarianism.—Unitarianism meets all demands, for it believes in God, in science and in the God of the present.—Rev. James Eelis, Unitarian, Boston, Mass.

Great Ideas.—Great ideas are, first of all, in the souls of the best men, and the public has to be educated up to them.—Rev. R. Thomas, Congregationalist, Boston, Mass.

Man Exalted.—God exalted man and made him a son of God; therefore has the body of Christ been given to nourish man.—Rev. Mr. Youman, R. C., San Francisco, Cal.

Wisdom.—The wisdom of life, therefore, while it consists partly in making our life larger, lies also in making it deeper.—Rev. William H. Lyon, Congregationalist, Boston, Mass.

Our Development.—For our own development and growth God is using the various agencies and instrumentalities of life.—Rev. A. C. Smithers, Christian Church, Los Angeles, Cal.

Doubt.—Doubt robs us of more than it gives. We are reminded that even Goethe once remarked that he was tired of hearing men's doubts.—Rev. Dr. Williams, Episcopalian, New York City.

Discipline.—We must all be disciplined in knowledge; we must be able to resist attacks on the truths of religion and the principles of morality.—Archbishop Riordan, R. C., San Francisco, Cal.

A Christian.—If you are a Christian you must have at least three things—a creed, something to believe; a code, something to go by, and a cult to worship.—Dr. Patton, Presbyterian, Princeton, N. J.

Citizenship.—It is important for free men to discuss the question of citizenship, especially when the exercise of it gives existence and development to political power.—Dr. Conoty, R. C., Washington, D. C.

The Labors of the Church.—The labors of the church, though all tending in one certain direction, flow along different channels, and it is not only the church's privilege, but its duty in many cases, to take cognizance of many things which do not come within the sphere of evangelical work.—Rev. John Hemphill, Presbyterian, San Francisco, Cal.

Civilization.—Civilization naturally anticipates a time when there shall be no war. War exists, and it is with God's permission, for nothing can exist with his disapprobation.—Rev. Edwards Davis, San Francisco, Cal.

Our Smallness.—You may be large compared with some of your neighbors, but let the sense of your smallness compared with the Almighty once come into your experience, and it will do you good.—Rev. A. E. Meyers, Collegiate, New York.

The Righteousness of Peace.—We are enjoying the righteousness of peace, after being used as a scourge for God's chastisement of another people. All war is ultimately crime on some one's part.—Rev. S. H. Cox, Congregationalist, Brooklyn, New York.

Our Ideas.—There are few things that are as we would like to have them. There is not much established that we should not move an amendment to if Providence could be coaxed to seconding the motion.—Dr. McElveen, Congregationalist, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Religion.—Religion involves a conscious experience with the God whom it adores; it must give a ground for morality in the belief in a constantly growing intimacy with and inward obedience to the great spritual father.—Rev. Lester Bradner, Jr., Episcopalian, New York City.

An Epoch.—The Philippine expeditions mark an epoch in history. It means that our conception of our mission to the world is to be enlarged, and that in the manifest providence of God it is called upon to propagate the rights of man.—Rev. E. Nelander, Lutheran, San Francisco, Cal.

Definite Principles.—As Christians we have made certain definite professions, we have certain definite principles. We have made promises in baptism, and have renewed them in confirmation, and every time we came to the holy communion.—Rev. J. B. Nies, Episcopalian, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Well-Made Ship Machinery.

The great liner Britannic, which commenced its trips between New York and Liverpool twenty-four years ago, a few days ago completed at the latter port it two hundred and fiftieth round voyage to and from New York. In other words, it has crossed the Atlantic 500 times, traveling an aggregate distance of 1,750,000 statute miles, without a renewal of either engines or boilers. It is claimed that this performance is without a parallel in nautical history.

Making It Right.

"Madame," said the leader of the Best Citizens' League, "I have come to inform you that we have lynched your husband by mistake."

The bereaved woman covered her face with her hands and began to moan.

"There, there," the best citizen went on; "don't cry. It'll come out all right yet. We expect to get the right man before night."

Ground Spiders and Spinners.

The spiders that spin webs are in an infinite minority compared with those which do not. Ground spiders, as the nonspinners are called, abound everywhere, and depend on agility and swiftness of foot to catch their prey.

"I," he started to say, "have always had an idea——" "I know it," she interrupted; "why don't you take a day off some time and try to scare up another one?"—Chicago News.

It makes any man mad to return to his office and find some loafer occupying his chair.

DEALING WITH LUMBERMEN.

Peculiar Tricks Indulged In by Both Buyer and Seller.

There is an old retired merchant in Detroit who delights in recalling his experiences when an active man running a general store in one of the northern cities of the lower peninsula.

"I used to reap a harvest when the men were coming out of the woods," he relates. "They were not up in styles, and about any old thing would suit them provided the color was right and the fit even passable. But there were tricksters among them, and I had to have my wits about me in order to keep even with them.

"'How much is that hat?' asked a strapping six footer, who arrived from camp one day with a pocketful of money.

"'Two fifty,' I replied.

"Then he informed me that he always had the crowns of his hats punched full of holes in order to keep his head cool and his hair from coming out. I soon had this attended to, and then he asked what the hat was worth. 'Two fifty,' I responded in surprise, but he laughed at me for asking such a price for damaged goods. He had me, and got his hat for $1, while the jolly crowd with him had a laugh at my expense. He wanted to look at some 'fiddles,' and after pricing one at $10 concluded to take it.

"'Where's the bow?' he asked, as I was doing up the package.

"'You only bought the fiddle,' I laughed. The others saw the point and laughed too. The giant tried to bluff me, but I kept good humored, and got even on the hat by charging him $1.50 for the bow. I not only got even, but the others were so pleased with my 'Yankee trick' that they spent plenty of money with me."—Detroit Free Press.

Mice of All Colors.

The National Mouse Club of England recently held an exhibition where several hundred mice competed for gold medals, champion cups and various other prizes. These little creatures are not the ordinary everyday mice which scare the cook and drive the mistress of the house to take refuge on a chair. They are well bred mice that expected to be petted and caressed and treated as tenderly as a pet cat or dog.

By careful breeding they have developed great variety in coloring and sometimes in shape. One very choice style of animal, called the spiny mouse, has a row of bristling hair for a spinal ornament and is a very cute miniature reproduction of a porcupine. The familiar white mice so often seen for sale on the streets here have been bred with black eyes instead of red ones. It has taken several years to produce these results, but the society now claims to be able to furnish mice in 12 or 13 different shades. To any one who is able to overcome the fear of mice they are dainty, delicate little studies at any time, but when they play around in suits of chocolate, sable, fawn, jet black, tortoise or golden agouti they become perfectly fascinating.

As in the case of all fads of this kind, the prices brought by these little pets are extremely steep. Fifteen dollars or $20 is not a large price to pay for a well bred mouse, and some of them have been sold for as high as $25.

A Judicial Ruling.

During the hearing of a case at the Bloomsbury county court counsel referred to the defendant, an Oxford master of arts, as "this man," whereupon defendant's counsel protested, saying he might at least have used the word "gentleman." Judge Bacon — Nonsense. That is the sort of affectation you often hear among women when they say "you ought to call me a lady." In my opinion man is a much better title than gentleman.—London Telegraph.

THE EXCELLENCE OF SYRUP OF FIGS

is due not only to the originality and simplicity of the combination, but also to the care and skill with which it is manufactured by scientific processes known to the CALIFORNIA FIG SYRUP CO. only, and we wish to impress upon all the importance of purchasing the true and original remedy. As the genuine Syrup of Figs is manufactured by the CALIFORNIA FIG SYRUP CO. only, a knowledge of that fact will assist one in avoiding the worthless imitations manufactured by other parties. The high standing of the CALIFORNIA FIG SYRUP CO. with the medical profession, and the satisfaction which the genuine Syrup of Figs has given to millions of families, makes the name of the Company a guaranty of the excellence of its remedy. It is far in advance of all other laxatives, as it acts on the kidneys, liver and bowels without irritating or weakening them, and it does not gripe nor nauseate. In order to get its beneficial effects, please remember the name of the Company—

COULD NOT SLEEP.

Mrs. Pinkham Relieved Her of All Her Troubles.

MRS. MADGE BABCOCK, 176 Second St., Grand Rapids, Mich., had ovarian trouble with its attendant aches and pains, now she is well. Here are her own words: "Your Vegetable Compound has made me feel like a new person. Before I began taking it I was all run down, felt tired and sleepy most of the time, had pains in my back and side, and such terrible headaches all the time, and could not sleep well nights. I also had ovarian trouble. Through the advice of a friend I began the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and since taking it all troubles have gone. My monthly sickness used to be so painful, but have not had the slightest pain since taking your medicine. I cannot praise your Vegetable Compound too much. My husband and friends see such a change in me. I look so much better and have some color in my face."

Mrs. Pinkham invites women who are ill to write to her at Lynn, Mass., for advice, which is freely offered.

A QUEER OLD WORLD.

If virtue would allure like sin
How easily might goodness win.

If right went laughing by like wrong
The devil would lose half his throng.

If day sought pleasure like the night
Dawn need not blush to face the light.

But virtue seems so cold and proud
That merry sin attracts the crowd.

And right has such a solemn air
Men follow wrong, the debonair,

And care so eats the daytime up
At night they seize mad folly's cup,

And drink forgetfulness till dawn.
And so the queer old world goes on.

HIGHWAY ROBBERY.

THAT Miss Foster was different from and more charming than all the rest of her sex might have been proved from any of the fifteen men to whom she had been engaged in two years since she had come back from school, beginning with Cadet Ferris and ending with Cady.

That Captain Foster was exactly like all the rest of mankind, and little deserved the blessing he had in his daughter, was manifested by his drawing from his pocket a letter, and saying as he gave it to her, "By the by, Kitty, this came for you yesterday while you were riding with Cady, and I forgot to give it to you."

Miss Foster looked at the postmark and at the almost feminine chirography, and knew that the letter was from Fort Bowie, and from Glocester. She laid it beside her plate and finished her breakfast. Afterward she took it up to her own room and read it. Then she sat with folded hands and looked, unseeing, at the photographs of the fifteen upon the wall before her. She was very white.

The most astute woman will frequently stake everything and play all her game upon honor in man. When that chances to fail, her calculations are set at naught, and the bottom falls out of her universe.

And Glocester's honor had failed. He wrote—Kitty read it again—"So you tell me you are engaged to Cady. That means little to you. But it may mean much to him. Therefore, to prevent his being made the fool that I have been, I have taken the liberty of sending him by this mail the letters you have written to me within the last month—four in number—that he may know with what manner of woman he has to deal."

Now, fourteen times before, Miss Foster had not been in earnest. But this time she was. Unfortunately, the fact that she cared greatly for Cady had not prevented her from writing to Glocester more affectionately than prudently, in order to keep him—t'other dear charmer who was away—upon her string, so long as it would hold him without snapping. And the letters, sent while she was actually engaged to Cady, were going to fall into his hands. It was a desperate situation. But, for all her blue eyes, and curls, and bewildering ways, Miss Foster was the woman to meet it.

After a time she rose to her feet and set her lips. It is a peculiarity of Cupid's-bow lips that they can set, upon occasions. She knew that Cady had not yet received those letters. And she determined that he never should. She would rob the stage.

Guard-mounting was just over, and the stage was not due until noon. Kitty set a big hat a-tilting upon her curls and walked down to the postoffice. Fate, with her partiality for the brave and fair, willed that the postmaster should have left his desk. Miss Foster pushed open the gate and went behind the rail. The keys to the mail-bag hung upon their hook. She put them in her pocket. When the postmaster came back she was placidly marking his clean blotter with the letter stamp.

"If you please, Mr. Jones," she said, "I want this letter registered."

An hour later Miss Foster reigned up her horse on the top of a rise and looked across the flat stretch of greasewood, and cactus, and sage. Far away a tiny speck was crawling toward her along the white road. It was the stage. She had been born upon the plains, and she had an unfailing eye for its distances. There would be full half an hour to wait. She cast about for some way of killing time, and found a deep, wide fissure in the parched earth. It appealed to her daring. She put her horse to a run and jumped it time and again until he was winded. Then she rode again to the crest of the slope. The stage was near. She dismounted, felt of the girths, and sat down, hugging the tiny noon-day shade of a mesquite bush, for the sun was burning down from a hard, blue sky. A big red ant was carrying a beetle's wing many times larger than itself. Kitty watched it until she heard the rattle of traces as the stage climbed the other side of the slope. The she commended her soul to heaven and brought her quirt down upon the horse's black flanks.

The stage-driver drew up his stock, and the one passenger put out his head and shoulders and gazed at the slender gray figure rising alone in the midst of the prairie.

"What ever, Miss Kitty—" the driver stopped short. He saw the horse grazing off a bunch of stumpy grass, a hundred yards away. Kitty went a step nearer and laid her hand on the wheel. She had seen that there was no woman in the stage. A woman would have upset all her calculations. She raised her big blue eyes. The men who could have resisted them were few. Those in the stage listened now to a tale calculated to melt a heart of stone.

"I was just out for a little ride," said Kitty, "and my girths were loose, so I dismounted to cinch up, and that horrid Dandy got away. If you had not come, I don't know whatever I should have done."

Miss Foster would not have been the woman she was if tears—the genii of the lamp of fair femininity—had not risen at her will. The driver looked again at the horse and back at Miss Foster. He had known her from the day of her birth. When he was in his first enlistment, long before he had returned to civil life, he had been her father's striker. He had held her upon a burro and taught her to ride before she could walk. Therefore, he was justly annoyed. For the cleverest conspirator is apt to overlook a detail, and Kitty had forgotten that the horse of a good rider, which has broken away, should have the bridle over its head.

"I'm sure, Miss Kitty," he said, "that it weren't me learned you to leave the reins hooked over the pommel when you dismounted—and I should have thought you could have mounted alone anywheres."

Kitty flushed. Of all things, she was proudest of her horsemanship.

"Do you think, O'Rourke, that you could catch Dandy for me?"

"I dunno," said O'Rourke, "'taint so easy to catch a horse when the reins is over the pommel."

But he wound the lines around the brake and jumped down. The passenger was not to be outdone. He jumped down, too, and together they went trotting across the plain.

Kitty had seen others try to catch Dandy. She climbed leisurely into the stage, and dragged the mail-pouch from under the seat. She was frightened now, and cold and trembling, and she threw quick glances to where O'Rourke and the passenger were advancing, and retreating, and deploying—never within arm's reach of Dandy. When she had stowed away in the crown of her cap a small package postmarked Bowie and addressed to Cady in a pointed, sprawling, almost feminine hand, she snapped the lock. She had left the keys in the bag. For she knew that the postmaster had duplicates. Then she steadied herself with a long-drawn breath, and, gathering her riding-skirts about her, walked toward Dandy, holding out her hand. Dandy had been brought up to believe that this meant sugar or nutmegs. He came, with neck outstretched, and nozzled in the little gloved palm.

"He is sorry he was naughty," said Miss Foster, scratching the back of his ear, "and he is going to be good, and never, never run away from his mistress again."

And then she rewarded O'Rourke by putting her booted foot in his great palm and springing to her seat in a manner that did his training credit. She smiled on the passenger and thanked him sweetly.

"I hope the postmaster will not be angry with me for delaying the transportation of the government mails," and she cantered away.

Cady sat himself upon the stop step of the porch of Captain Foster's quarters. Miss Foster did the same. Cady's face was stern and set. Miss Foster's was white and scared. There was a silence. Then Cady drew from his pocket a package of letters. They were in Kitty's writing. Kitty drew from her pocket another package. They were in Cady's hand. Cady spoke first.

"Here," he said, "is a bundle of letters—four in number. They came to me in to-day's mail. They were accompanied by this note from Glocester. I need not assure you that I have not read them, but I gather from what he says that they are of an exceedingly personal nature, and of very recent date. You may guess my opinion of Glocester. But," he bent upon her a look of withering scorn, "you cannot guess my opinion of you."

He held the bundle out to her. She pushed it away. Then she held up before his eyes a package of much the same size. He reached out for them quickly.

"Not yet!" said Kitty. "Here," she continued, "is a bundle of letters—six in number. They came in to-day's mail. They were accompanied by a note from Miss Fowler, of Bowie. I need not assure you that I have read them. They are of an exceedingly personal—I may say affectionate—nature and of very recent date. They were written by you to Miss Fowler. I read, too, the note with which she returned them. Here it is. You may find it of interest—I did."

Cady took the package she held out to him. Miss Foster took the one Cady held out to her. And again there was silence.

Then the lieutenant spoke. "To whom, may I ask, were the letters from Miss Fowler addressed?"

"To you."

"And may I also ask how, in that event, they came into your possession?"

Miss Foster considered. "No."

Cady put his package in his pocket and fastened his blouse over them. Then he sat looking over the parade-ground. After a time he put his hands on his knees and turned and faced Miss Foster.

"Well?" he said. Kitty's eyes had been cast down, so that her long lashes lay upon her cheeks. She raised them. He looked down steadily into their blue and twinkling depths.

"Well?" echoed Kitty. And then he smiled.

Miss Foster gave a huge sigh of relief. "Isn't it curious," she said, "how exactly alike Miss Fowler and Mr. Glocester write? Any one might have been deceived."

Which was not very revelant; but Cady did not ask what she meant. Irrelevancy was one of Miss Foster's many charms.—The Argonaut.

Pleasure that isn't shared with another loses half its power to please.

FOR LITTLE FOLKS.

A COLUMN OF PARTICULAR INTEREST TO THEM.

Something that Will Interest the Juvenile Members of Every Household—Quaint Actions and Bright Sayings of Many Cute and Cunning Children.

The shrike's ordinary method of capturing prey closely resembles that of the fly-catcher, to which, however, it is not really related. The resemblance is merely one of those due to similarity of habit.

Every well-conducted butcher-bird has a settled perch or pitch on which he sits to watch and wait, and to which he returns after each short excursion. Flies and bees he catches on the wing, darting down upon them suddenly with a swoop like a king-fisher's; but he also often takes them sitting, especially when they are seated on a leaf or a branch, or are eating carrion.

One of his favorite hunting-boxes is a telegraph wire, and he prefers one that crosses the corner of a wood; there he will sit with his head held saplently on one side, keeping a sharp lookout from his beady brown eyes in every direction. If a bee light on a head of clover, if a cockchafer stir, if a mouse move in the grass, if a fledgling thrush make a first unguarded attempt to fly—woe betide the poor innocent; our butcher-bird is upon him, with a fierce, darting beak, and in ten seconds more his writhing body adds to the store in the shrike's larder.

A good place and time to watch a butcher-bird at work is in a quiet field by a copse just after the mowing. But you must hide carefully. The short grass is then full of beetles, crickets and grasshoppers, as well as of mice, shrews and lizards, which can conceal themselves less easily than they were wont to do in the long hay before the cutting.

At such times, hawks and owls made a fine livelihood in the fields; but their habit is to hunt their quarry on the open. They hover and drop upon it. That is not the butcher-bird's plan; he is a more cautious and secret foe; he sits casually on his branch or his telegraph wire, with his head on one side, till his prey stirs visibly; then he pounces on him from above, making a short excursion each time, and returning to rest on his accustomed position.

When he catches a bird, and eats it at once, he begins by spitting it on a thorn; then he attacks the skull first, breaking it through and eating the brain, which is his favorite tid-bit. He also raids on the nests of other birds, and carries off the nestlings.—Grant Allen.

Lord Fauntleroy Is Changed.

When Little Lord Fauntleroy was a long-haired, wide-collared boy he was devoted to a ball some one had given him, so his faithful chronicler says. Once, when it rolled beneath a dray, he wept to see the thing he had loved and cherished so mangled by cruel wheels.

A few weeks ago Little Lord Fauntleroy—Victor Burnett—was an active participant in a foot-ball game. Of course, every one knows that Mrs. Burnett was merely historian of her son when she wrote her famous book. It interested a great many persons to see how Victor Burnett treated the ball. He kicked it so far that he came near making a new football record. He kicked it so hard that he was a hero with a mob cheering his name like mad. And for the second time he was a hero—this time a football hero instead of a book hero.

Where Reasoning Failed.

"Mamma, have I any children?" asked little 5-year-old Ella upon her return home from Sunday school. "Why, no, of course not! What put that idea into your head?" replied the surprised mother. "Because," answered the little lady, "our lesson at Sunday school to-day was about people's children and their children's children."

Knowledge of the Abstract.

"What is an abstract noun, Nellie?" asked the teacher, of a bright little girl. "Don't know," was the answer. "You don't know!" exclaimed the teacher. "Well, it's the name of something you can think of but can't touch. Now, can you give an example?" "A red-hot poker," was the surprising and prompt reply.

Queer Facts About China.

China, or "the Celestial Empire," as it is sometimes called, is a land of mystery and curiosities to most of us. From an American point of view the Chinese do many things "upside down," and even nature seems to ape this, to us, contrary system. For instance, the Hwang-ho, or Yellow River, one of the two largest rivers in the empire, through a large portion of its course is higher than the surrounding plain. Another river, the Han Keang, is only 200 feet wide at its mouth, but grows wider as the distance from its mouth increases. In the summer this river is higher than its natural banks, with the result that, were it not for walls that hold the water in check, the surrounding country would be under water for the greater part of the year.

Jack's Point of View.

His little sister pouted:
"I think it was a shame
For you to get the scolding
When you were not to blame.
Why didn't some one tell them
The truth about the ball—
That Freddy Fearing threw it,
And it wasn't you at all?
But that's the way it always is;
It's just the same old song
When any mischief happens—
It's Jack who's in the wrong!
And other boys, I'm sure of it,
Are every bit as bad.
I'm sick of such injustice!
It makes me hopping mad!"

Jack kissed his little sister:
"Oh, don't you fret!" he said,
With a twinkle in his laughing eyes—
"And don't you peach on Fred.
I told the little beggar
(He was scared to death, you see,
When the ball went through the window)
To leave it all to me.
Nobody fibbed about it;
But the fellows ran away.
'Twas just the situation—
Somebody had to stay.
Of course I caught it heavy,
But bless you!—think what fun
For me to get a scolding
For a thing I hadn't done!"
—St. Nicholas.

An Incomplete Education.

Visitor—Well, Tommie, how are you getting on at school? Tommie (aged 8)—First rate. I ain't doing as well as some of the other boys, though. I can stand on my head, but I have to put my feet against the fence. I want to do it without being near the fence at all, like some of the boys do, and I can after I've been to school long enough."

RECENT INVENTIONS.

A Texan has patented a billiard cue which is chambered at the end and filled with chalk, to be discharged through a small opening to the face of the cue as each shot is made.

In a new English bicycle saddle a metallic ring, supported by braces, is strung with straps or other flexible material to form a flat seat which springs with the weight of the rider.

To ascertain the size of finger rings a new measuring device has a flat base on which the finger is placed, with graduated bars to surround the finger and indicate the size of ring needed.

In an improved footrest for boot-blacking stands clamps are provided for the sole and heel portions, which can be adjusted to fit any foot and clamped in place by a lever at the side of the base.

In a new jack-screw for raising heavy bodies the spiral ribs inside the frame are replaced by a series of steel balls which mesh in the grooves on the threaded shaft and decrease the friction as the shaft is turned.

A handy hitching post has a spring drum inserted in the top, on which is wound a cord with a snap hook at the outer end for attachment to the bridle, the spring pulling the rope into the post when not in use.

A handy cup for drinking purposes has a weighted section formed under the flange in the bottom, so that the cup can be dropped into the spring when not in use, the weight keeping it in an upright position as it floats.

Bags can be quickly fastened by an Ohio man's device, consisting of two steel members pivoted together, with a yoke on one which locks over teeth on the other member as they are pressed over the mouth of the sack.

He Would Not Believe It.

There is at times excuse for incredulity. A certain representative of the Sultan of Turkey on one occasion was perhaps to be excused for unbelief.

It was when the Duke of York—now the heir to the English throne, and the commander of a battleship—was a young midshipman, and his ship was in Turkish waters. The story is vouched for by Admiral Sir Frederick Bedford, under whom Prince George served.

The vessel called at a Turkish port to coal, and during this operation a representative of the Sultan came to pay his respects to his royal highness. He was courteously received by the captain, but in response said that it was for the Prince his visit was intended.

"I am in command," said Sir Frederick, "and the Prince is an officer, but here he comes."

At that moment the Queen's grandson, who was in command of the coaling party, and who was noted for energy in the performance of his duties, came up. That he was in command of the coaling party needed not to be explained to the visitor. The fact was apparent. He was as black as any of the men.

TAILOR-MADE SUITS.

DISTINCT CHANGE FOR MIDWINTER GOWNS.

Sheath Skirts Are the Only Correct Thing—Elaborate Waistcoat and Front Effects Seen with Otherwise Severe Costumes.

New York correspondence:

MIDWINTER tailor gowns will show a distinct change of fashions in tailor styles. Suits for women whose following of all changes in fashion is not slavish will not show these points so clearly as will the exquisites, but what follows is from the exquisite's standpoint. No advice to do likewise goes with excruciatingly exact details, but the most minute demands may be well kept in mind by women who do not intend following them. This because adapters should have something assuredly correct to start with; then their modifications, though extensive, will still so clearly reflect what is absolutely correct, that there will not, at least, be any danger of a new gown passing for an old one. From the most finicky tailor maid's standpoint, then, the skirt must be the sheath sort. The newest skirts have no fastening at the back. They close at one or both sides of the front, the closing hidden under trimming, braiding, insertion or banding of some sort. The body is fitted without wrinkle well over the hips and down the back, and fitted marvelously well. A few skirts are shown slit at the hips, to show an under and sheath-like silk skirt. Front and back are curved out to follow the waist and there is no fullness, the slash allowing the needed spring.

The skirt is long and sweeping, and the latest bodice is a little jacket, somewhat the sort of thing small "buttons" at the door wears. It is curved short on the hips, and slopes a little at the front, but

AN ADVANCED SET STREET SWEEPER.

A lilac velvet yoke was cut out a little at the neck to show a tiny guimpe of tucked and shirred lawn. Under the edge of the waist coat at the waist showed a folded scarf of lawn, with a knot at one side of the front, and long scarf ends of the lawn were finished with great applied bows of velvet and an edge of fur.

After that it's time to consider the details of the pictured suits, which were of the simple sort, but right up to date in cut and finish. In the original of the first small picture, dark blue storm serge was trimmed with bias folds, fine lines of black soutache crossing the fronts. Next comes a suit of light gray broadcloth finished at the throat it opens with coat revers, and may show a yoke, very often of tucked satin or some bright stuff. This yoke sometimes has a panel piece that extends to the waist, there being secured by strings. This is to allow the jacket to be opened for a few buttons. The jacket is boned inside the silk lining—that is, it is finished with coat-lined effect, though intended to be worn over the corset cover.

Other two-piece tailor gowns are made with coat close fitting but opening to the waist with revers, which display elaborate waistcoat and front effects. As, for instance, a tailor-made blue velvet gown showed an open front bodice displaying a double-breasted white silk waistcoat embroidered at the edges with cherries and leaves, the waistcoat crossing over a yoke of mull all lace and frills. Precisely the same model was carried out in black broadcloth, the waistcoat being embroidered French flannel, the front a dainty affair of lawn and hemstitching. The two-piece tailor gown is a favorite. The trailing skirt with sheath back is also worn with a long frock coat to match, the back fitting without a wrinkle over the hips, the perfectly cut long tails adding to the princess-like smoothness. These coats are often very loose in front, almost baggy, and when open display fronts of great elaboration and daintiness.

Though gowns of this last sort are tailored, they are quite a different matter from what is commonly meant by tailor gowns, or from what is presented herewith in pictures. Among them are exquisitely dainty affairs of white broadcloth, with a severity of outline brought about by absence of fluffs and frills, and yet elaborated by inlaying of lace or of panels, or in touches of fur till the sense is bewildered. Gray is the color, the most delicate grays are the shades, and these are used in combination with lavender, white, green or with rose. Usually there is some white, no matter what other color is used, and almost always some fur. A tailor gown of gray cloth inlaid with spangles of silver was cut in deep vandykes just below the knees, and hung loose over an underskirt of lavender mirror velvet finished at the edge with brown Persian lamb. The bodice, tailor in simplicity of outline, was a double-breasted eton, slashed at the darts to show a waistcoat of brown Persian, which turned back in revers overlying those of the cloth, with bias folds and a darker gray velvet. Next a brown tweed mixture whose only ornamentation was machine stitching and not much of that. Then is shown a suit of automobile red cheviot, trimmed with black velvet for the collar and with black silk soutache for the rest, the buttons being black bone. The last of the four together was hunter's green cloth, bias folds and steel buttons for finish. Plain skirts that touched the ground were included with each suit. In the last two of to-day's pictures are costumes of much the same grade, but shown in full length because they included "advanced" skirts. The first one dragged a little, not more than moderate fashions indorse, though even its sweeping is far from sensible. But the second skirt had a distinct train though intended for the street. A woman in such a dress can feel that she not only is leading the fashions, but that few of her sisters will follow her. Fancy brown braid trimmed tan suiting prettily in the first of these suits, and black ladies' cloth was used for the other. This last model can be had, too, in the most delicate grays, but think of how long a light gray would last in such a street sweeper!

The paletot or very long cloak ulster now being worn is sometimes made part of a tailor costume consisting besides of skirt and close fitting bodice. In all such cases the paletot is planned for wear with other costumes. Many of the most careful dressers present costumes of the tailor variety—that is, of cloth and made with great severity of outline, elaborated by tiny capes. The cape is to match the cloth of the dress, and is dainty with chiffon lining, high elaborated collar and scarf of chiffon. The result is charming, and it is a question whether such costumes should be classified as tailor-made or as a "milliner's confection." The highly wrought cape harmonizes the severe dress with an elaborate hat, and makes it suitable for picture shows, early receptions and calls where the exact tailor gown might seem too austere. But headwear for even simple tailor suits may be showy, as these pictures indicate.

The accessories of the exquisite tailor maid are many. She must have high boots, half boots, patent leather dress and walking shoes. Her slippers and house foot gear are after the manner of other girls. But if she is a real thing tailor girl, all her walking shoes will be big and her bill for "shines" will be something awful.

S. C. Hammond, President of the Butcher's Board of Trade of San Francisco, gives it as his opinion that high rates for beef will prevail for at least two years yet. To an Examiner representative Mr. Hammond said:

Eastern buyers have been in this market and Nevada the past two years. Last year 100,000 sheep and lambs were sent east from Nevada. One sale of 23,000 was made which is equal to ten day's supply for San Francisco. Each of the transports took 40,000 to 125,000 pounds, and this market is now feeding from 20,000 to 30.000 people between here and Manila, including those at the Philippines. With the exception of a small portion of embalmed beef sent in cans from Chicago, the supply is drawn from this city. Honolula is also short, and an arrangement has been made with the Spreckels line to carry at least 50,000 pounds on each steamer. We are drawing on Arizona, Nevada and Oregon for our supplies There are no cattle in a marketable condition in California outside of those on the ranches of Miller & Lux. The season this year is two months later than usual. This year's beef should be in about the middle of April. It will be June before they begin to arrive. San Francisco and Alameda counties need about 400 cattle a day and 3,000 sheep and lambs, and for the local consumption of pork 400 hogs are slaughtered. To meet this demand there are in sight from 12,000 to 18,000 cattle in Nevada and about 7,000 or 8,000 of this year's output on the Miller & Lux ranches. It will take two or three years to recuperate the stock.

If the cartoon papers are wise they will cease to punch the bear. This thing of attempting to intimidate a Legislature by repeating the offense which is frowned upon, may not be a winning game. It is not probable that the cartoons published of Legislators hurt them at all, or one whit lessen them in the esteem of their neighbors and constituents, when confined to mere pictorial humor. But when the cartoon is made the weapon of charge and of assault upon integrity, we must assume legislators to be more or less than men if they do not strike back. And then, too, there are some millions of people outside of legislative halls who cannot understand that if it is sound law, as the courts have held, that the face of the dead and the right to take its mask or its portrait is the property of the next of kin and not of whomsoever claims, why is not the face of the living man the property of the man himself, over which he has the absolute control as to its representation or caricature in pictorial art. When it comes, then, to the bare question of human right, unquestionably a man is proprietor of his own features, and no one has the right to make free with them any more than with his purse.

Four thousand natives killed by American soldiers. Of course Americans swell with pride over the success of her soldiers in battle, but with the news from Manilla there must come to every American a feeling of sadness that slaughter should have begun in the Philippines. Soldiers who went forth to battle with an oppressive monarchy have been forced to turn their guns upon a race whose only crime seems to have been that they want their country for their own. Out of the successes at Manila will come many days of sorrow to America. Eight million warlike islanders are not kept in subjugation without endless expense and the sacrifice of many lives.

It is possible that the annexation of the Philippines will prove decidedly beneficial to that country by giving its commerce an opportunity to expand, but no favorable result can be expected if it costs more to keep the Filipinos in subjection than the trade of the islands amounts to. The aim should be to bring about a condition of affairs which will cause the natives to be perfectly satisfied with our rule. If this is done it will not be necessary to maintain a large standing army in the islands, or, for that matter, any army at all. If we can't get along without a big force to keep the islanders quiet, we had better let them go their way in peace.

When this country gets used to the idea of governing foreign territory without the consent of the governed, it will only be a short time until the people here will have to submit to the same sort of rule. It will be a sad day for the common people of America when our statesmen no longer reverence the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution.

Now there is to be a caucus. It should have been held long since if the Senatorial squabble can be settled thereby. And it will be. By dropping the low man on each ballot, the fight will soon be between Grant, Burns and Bulla, and when it comes the latter's turn to get off the track, the toga will fall on the colonel as naturally as though it were intended for him from the first.

The repeated accounts of fatal accidents in which young boys and loaded shotguns play the leading parts, suggest the advisability of the State Board of Health issuing a bulletin in which the public should be warned against the dangers which accompany the act of looking down the muzzle of a loaded gun while somebody is monkeying with the trigger.

With the glistening whitewash from the friendly brush of the investigating committee thick upon him, Secretrry Alger will never find a more opportune time to resign than the present.

BREATH AND TONE.

Unusual Advice to Vocal Students About Controlling the Breath.

The above title may seem a little unusual, as most beginners in the study of the art of singing appear to suppose that it requires a great deal of breath to make a tone. But to such a one I would emphasize the instruction, "Do not take too much breath," or I might change the phraseology and say, "Only take a little breath."

What is meant by the above direction is don't overload yourself with breath, as many do. One never does this in speaking; why should it be done in singing? Have you ever been forced to think of controlling your breath when speaking? Of course not. You can speak by the hour and never think it necessary to take breath, because you do so unconsciously at the end of every phrase or sentence, merely replacing in so doing the small amount of air which you have just used. You are talking on what might be called an even lung full of air—viz, you have never either completely filled or emptied your lungs.

When a beginner is asked to sing, he almost invariably takes into his lungs about as much air as he can retain. In such a condition he could not speak comfortably, and why, therefore, should he expect to sing or produce a musical tone? When properly used, it takes only a small expenditure of air to make tone, and a singer with his lungs only comfortably filled will not have that suffocating feeling which causes him to expel unvocalized air with the tone in order to get relief from the overpressure in his lungs.

Starting with the lungs only comfortably filled, a singer will find it possible, with a throat perfectly easy and relaxed, so far as his voluntary muscles are concerned, to hold a tone for a long time, because at first he will not be tempted to overblow the tone and thus waste the air, and later on, when it seems that nearly all the air in the lungs is exhausted, he will find that by what I call "pulling up from beneath" he can draw on a reservoir of air which he rarely uses.

The foregoing ideas in regard to controlling the breath properly are expressed by a writer in The Etude.

Food For the Aged.

At the latter extremity of life little trouble is taken to suit the diet to the changed requirements. Sir Henry Thompson warns us that old age—the time when digestive forces are on the wane—is not the period for increased richness of food and condensed forms of alimentation. This is an error leading to much misery in old age. Less meat is required after middle age, and the food should be light and easily digested. Dishes difficult of mastication are also to be avoided, for although the modern dentist has done his part toward removing this necessity, yet the ability to assimilate the hearty foods is greatly lessened in advancing years. Undoubtedly many elderly persons suffer from anæmia through lack of suitable foods. Plain joints they can no longer eat with pleasure or benefit, and, such things as nourishing soups, minces and appetizing made dishes containing various cereals and vegetables not being always available, the appetite not being clamorous, they go without, thus becoming bloodless and suffering from lack of vitality. Fruit, both cooked and raw, is an invaluable food for those past middle life, as indeed it is at all ages.

Wrinkles and Massage.

Wrinkles come from the relaxation of the skin and from the gradual withdrawal of flesh making properties from the face. Massage will be found to give tone to the skin, and if a little carefully prepared complexion cream is rubbed in at the same time, it will supply the nourishment which the skin would otherwise lack and without which the wrinkles will become much more unsightly. For a double chin, face massage is very good in reducing it to its normal proportions. But the treatment in this case is rather different and requires the use of the tips of the fingers rather than the kneading process with the hand.

JEWELRY JOTTINGS.

Among dainty veil pins are enameled birds, butterflies and bees with outspread wings.

Birth stone bracelets represent a favorite style in these increasingly fashionable articles.

An exceedingly handsome bracelet is a wide band of gold, the clasp formed of a cameo framed in pearls.

A gold serpent in many and intricate coils studded with diamonds and having a ruby in its head serves as a brooch.

Strands of the old fashioned irregularly shaped coral beads are arranged as "dog" collars that fasten with jeweled buckles.

The opal is again talked of. It is just now a pet gem with Parisians. Opals and diamonds are set in alternation on some of the new stiff bracelets.

The convenient little pins that are utilized variously in the toilet include small green beetles, ladybirds, lizards, snakes, turtles, frogs, spiders and similar objects; the more odd and unusual the design the more successful it is accounted.

An attractive scarfpin for a man consists of a stirrup of plain gold within which hangs a diamond horseshoe, while in the center of this is a large sapphire. With conservative dressers a single pearl or a little ball of gold is a favorite pin.—Jewelers' Circular.

Ordinance No. 64.

The Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo, State of California, Do Ordain As Follows:

SECTION 1. Every male person over the age of twenty-one and under fifty-five years of age, found in each Road District in the County of Inyo, State of California, between the first day of March, 1899, and the thirty-first day of December, 1899, excepting all persons who were honorably discharged from service in the army or navy of the United States, at any time between the first day of April, in the year A. D. 1861, and the first day of September, A. D. 1865, and who have not paid the same in some other road district, must pay to the said County of Inyo, a Road Poll Tax of Two Dollars provided the same be paid before the first Monday in July, but if not paid prior to the first Monday in July then it shall be Three Dollars.

SECTION 2. Said Road Poll Tax shall be collected by the Assessor of the said County of Inyo, in the same manner that State Poll Taxes are collected, and shall be paid to the Treasurer of the said County of Inyo, and shall be placed to the credit of the several Road Districts of the said County of Inyo from which said Road Poll Tax was collected.

SECTION 3. This ordinance shall take effect and be in force from and after fifteen days from its passage, and all Ordinances and parts of ordinances of said Board in conflict herewith, are hereby repealed.

SECTION 4. This ordinance shall be published with the names of the members of said Board of Supervisors voting for and against the same, in the Inyo Independent, a newspaper published in the said County of Inyo, at least one week; said publication to be made for said time and before the expiration of said fifteen days.

A. C. FREEMAN,

SUPERIOR COURT PROCEEDINGS.

Hon. Walter A. Lamar, Judge.

THURSDAY, Feb. 23, 1899.

John Albars vs T. S.. Richards—Case on trial before Court without a jury.

Jesus Carrasco is up from Lone Pine.

J. H. Cole is in from Ballarat on a short visit.

P. A. Chalfant of the Inyo Register is visiting in town,

S. E. Deck was down from Bishop early in the week.

The apricot trees are out in full bloom and are beautiful sfghts.

S. E. Vermilyea Esq., is down from Bishop on legal business.

J. R. Eldred and wife of Big Pine spent a couple of days in town this week.

The mother of Dr. G. P. Doyle arrived from the East last Thursday and is visiting wtth him.

C. F. Fuller and Henry Melone came down from Fish Spring early in the week and remained in town a day or two.

Mrs. V. G. Smith has been quite ill with the grip for the past week. She has been visiting her brother, D. J. Hession.

Miss Simona Aguirre returned to Bodie Tuesday, after a month's visit with her parents.

The infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Bell died at Big Pine on the 21st. Jacob Vagt and Mr. and Mrs. Glade went up to attend the funeral.

A storm set in from the north last night and there is a "spitting" of snow this morning. It appears to be snowing heavily in the mountains.

John Commetti came back from San Francisco on Wednesday's train. Last Fall he met with a severe injury to his eyes and has been having them treated.

P. H. Mack Esq. is expected on to-night's train. He will remain until Tuesday attending to some cases in the Superior Court, and then return to Sacramento and remain until the close of the session.

Mrs. Bertrand Rhine came to Independence last Friday from Poleta, where she has been visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. O. Collins. She left with her two little daughters for San Francisco on Tuesday morning.

Mr. A. W. de la Cour Carroll of Lone Pine visited town this week. Mr. Carroll has just finished some pictures of his rare Indian-basket collection, which prove that as a photographer and collector this gentleman is far from an amateur.

Dr. Dorrance came down from Bishop on Wednesday and together with Dr. Blair examined George McCaffrey for insanity. The first named doctor decided that he was not crazy enough to send to an asylum; consequently he will remain a county charge with two attendants.

We received a fine lot of flour last week from the Round Valley and Bishop Creek flouring mills. On sampling the output of these mills the fact is discovered that Mr. Jones and Mr. Kilpatrick can mill an article quite as superior as the flour sent out from any of the Nevada mills.

Parker Barnes came down from Hawthorne last Friday and has spent the week in town. In company with E. T. Anderson of Keeler he will go to the Mazourka country in a day or two for a prospecting trip. There is an extensive mineral country there which has never been systematically explored, and they stand an excellent chance to uncover a bonanza.

A party consisting of the following named gentlemen arrived at Independence to-day from Los Angeles en route for Bishop: G. M. Smith, J. Haworth, John Fisher, H. A. Willtams, Tom Morris. They are looking over the farming country with a view to purchasing. Mr. Williams is a representative of the Whittier Register and is accompanying the party for an outing. They have their own conveyance and have been twelve days on the road.

The Water Question.

In this vicinity the question of water supply is paramount to all others, for our very existence in this valley depends upon its volumn. When the storms rage in the contiguous mountains and the peaks and mountains are obscured by thickly falling snow, the faces of the residents hereabout are wreathed in smiles. They know that each snow storm above them means an additional supply of water for the coming year. An abundance of snow flakes, each individually insignificant, in the aggregate means an abundance to all the dwellers around. Without water the sweet-smelling fields of alfalfa soon return to their primitive sage brush condition. The blooming orchards and gardens, the fat stock, dwindle and soon disappear. With an abundance of water and the tickling of the thirsty but rich soil with plough and harrow, the landscape seems to break out in smiles of the richest verdure, and a little more water turns out into a broad grin the faces of the soil owners and workers.

Nature has been working for centuries to prepare the soil of this valley for the welfare of man. To-day the valley could be turned into a veritable paradise if the people so chose. The climate is almost perfect. It invites to outdoor life almost every day in the year. The winds blow away all miasma. The perpetual sunshine is like an elixer. The scenery is sublime in its grandeur. The lights and shadows in the valley and over these vast mountain heights forms the grandest panaroma in the world. All these utilities and beauties are ours. Have we made the most of them? I answer emphatically, "No". We growl because it does not rain here or snow in the mountains. We wait for Nature to drop the plums of wealth right into our hands.

If it does not rain or snow a certain quantity our crops fail, and we blame nature, not ourselves. Instead of patiently studying her moods and whims and acting as rational beings, we bemoan our fate, metaphorically wring our hands, and would pray for rain if we had not lost our childish faith in that direction. Short crops have followed droughty seasons as far back as the oldest inhabitant can remember, and big crops have followed when there was an abundance of snow and rain on the mountains. This seems to be the sum of the knowledge of all the dwellers herein, so far as can be discovered. Up to date there has been no concerted nor collective effort to do other than follow in the well beaten paths of our predecessors. We have schools, churches and all the other accessories of civilization, but we belong almost to the troglodyte period so far as collective effort to improve public facilities and utilities is concerned. The ancient Peruvians, Babylonians and Egyptians carried the art of irrigation to such a point that they made the deserts to bloom like the rose. Are we inferior to these ancient worthies, whom we profess to despise because they did not use the telephone the telegraph and the steam-engine? They surmounted obstacles a thousand times more difficult than any we have at present to contend with. What was the secret of their success? It was intelligent collective effort. While we do not wish to imitate these ancient worthies in many things other than their despotic governments, we can learn from them how to conserve the blessings of nature and turn many of her seeming curses into blessings. When a dude asked a famous painter what he mixed his paints with, he replied sarcastically but truthfully, "Brains sir." We can do the same here. We have plenty of brains here, a superabundance now going to waste, which if we judiciously mixed up in the investigation of this perennial water problem, would soon result in making our valley blossom like the rose, and make our surroundings truly edenic. We know that every body knows all that we have said in such commonplace terms, but a question of this nature must be threshed over and over again until it rises above discussion and terminates in action that will benefit all the community. Everybody knows that there is a large percentage of the water that now comes down from the mountains going to waste in a hundred different places between the base of the mountains and the town of Independence. What is the actual percentage of loss it is difficult to estimate because experts differ on that point. We do know that if the streams were terra cottaed from the base to the town that the potential volume would be increased considerably, and that in the dryest season ever known there would scarcely be the shortage there is at the present writing. We all know that enough money has been spent in litigation to have accomplished this conservation of the volume as above mentioned. It is not the litigation alone that makes future trouble and mischief. There is in the heart and brain of every citizen an instinctive feeling of the strongest antagonism against the monopolization of any of God's gifts to man, such as earth, air and water, which crops out occasionally among the most law abiding communities; and this feeling can never be laid until the State or the Nation steps in and controls the whole for the benefit of the whole body of citizens. Each community, if wise, will work out this problem for itself, without the aid of lawyers or force of any kind. If otherwise, then there is potential trouble, liable to break out at any time and often when least expected. If this problem were insoluble we should be the last to open up a question so charged as this is with inflammable material. We imagine, however, that we do know a thing or two more than our ancient worthies in Peru or Egypt, and that as a people we have grappled with graver problems and conquered them, and we can overcome this without any trouble if we will only get together as good law abiding American citizens and discuss it in the best interests of the community. As Benjamin Franklin wittily put it on a certain momentous occasion in our history, "If we don't hang together now we will hang separately bye and bye." Let us get together at the earliest opportunity and discuss the question, because it means all that makes life worth living in this valley to us and our children.

Big Pine News.

BIG PINE, February, 22 1899.

ED. INDEPENDENT:

The average Big Piner will scarcely believe that this day commemorates the truthful father of his country,—which I mean—many of them promised to go to Bishop last night and visit the old blue boys, ar rather the old boys in blue on the occasion of their annual hop; and they all fabricated a narrative in relation thereto, leaving it to one bald-headed veteren to represent a community which could have sent an entire delegation with capillary appendages. Not only that, but "Baldy" is expected to tell the readers of the INDEPENDENT about the aforesaid hop. Well, here goes. The hall was decorated a la Patriotism, flags, bunting and portraits of all promineni exponents of Americanism. At about 9 o'clock p. m., February 21st, 1899 the bugle called the guests of the "old boys" to fall in for the grand march. The same was led by Miss Lilian Shirley and her brother, Arthur Shirley, son and daughter of Commander Shirley of Gen. John A. Logan Post, No. 180, Department of California and Nevada, G. A. R. The intricate evolutions of which aforesaid grand march were evoluted in a manner fit to put the hair back on the head of the oldest veteran in Inyo. The crowning evolute of this drill left rank and file set for the opening quadrille. From this time until "Retions" was sounded no halt or rest was indulged in. The grub served by Comrade Harness under the direction of his niece, Miss Maymie Clarke, was heartily appreciated by all hands. The merry whirl continued untill the old Guard bade their guests a hearty Godspeed until the next Assembly at the rim of the century. Your scribe would like to mention the many "ladyes faire" who contributed to his enjoyment on this happy occasion. But a wholesome regard for the welfare of the few lone mementoes of his former healthy hirsute appendage, checks the incautious wish. We hope that the aforesaid fair ones will take the will for the deed and remember when they gaze on the souvenirs of the Veterans annual hop of 1899, that the old boys in blue heartily appreciate the annual greetings of the sons and daughters of the land and are reminded that their efforts in the cause of national unity will be borne in mind when the last old veteran shall have been mustered out. The capital of Inyo was reprosented by Mr. Avah Bell.

This afternoon Henry McCaroll's horse, Salvator, will run "the length of the lane" agatnst the little Randle mare for a small purse.

Respectfully,
SWAMPER.

Masonic Installation.

Last Saturday evening the Masons of Lodge No. 221 publically installed the members elected two months since. The Masonic building has been condemned as unsafe for a crowd, so the meeting was held in the Court-room. The following; members of the lodge were installed: John S. Gorman, W. M. Omie I. Mairs, Treas., Irv. H. Mulholland, S. D., Jarius D. Mairs, J. D., Alvah C. Harvey and David Johnson, Stewards, George W. Brady, Tyler.. The admonitions and commands given the new officers were most impressive. After the installation the Worshipful Master, John S. Gorman invited all present to join the Masons in partaking of a banquet served at Mairs' dining room. Some 185 people responded to the invitation, and roast turkey and pig, pies, cakes and salad etc. soon reached the vanishing point. After the banquet all repaired to Mairs, Hall where the jolliest dance of the season was rushed along until—midnight. The Masons are to be congratulated on their powers as entertainers.

To The Public.

During the many years we have been doing business with you we have never made a practice of advertising fake sales. We have concluded to make ome important changes in our business, and in consequence offer our entire stock at actual cost for cash. This sale will continue for ninety days and will be without reserve. This is an opportunity never before offered the people of Inyo and should be taken advantage of. At the end of the time specified we shall announce some radical changes in our business. Thanking you for the generous patronage you have accorded us and soliciting its continuance, we remain,

Yours Respectlully,
N. RHINE.

On a Long Island farm is an apple tree which bore two crops of fruit the past year, and the farmers are taking unusual interest in this peculiarity of nature. Just as much interest has been shown in Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which has the peculiarity of curing dyspepsia, indigestion, constipation and blood disorders that other remedies fail to benefit. In chronic cases it rarely fails, and it cures whenever a cure is possible.

DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

Carlyle Hears Dickens Read.

April 29, 1863, Carlyle wrote thus of one of Dickens' readings, says O. T. Copeland in The Atlantic: "I had to go yesterday to Dickens' reading 8 p. m., Hanover rooms, to the complete upsetting of my evening habitudes and spiritual composure. Dickens does do it capitally, such as it is; acts better than any Macready in the world; a whole tragic, comic, heroic theater visible, performing under one hat and keeping us laughing—in a sorry way, some of us thought—the whole night. He is a good creature, too, and makes £50 or £60 by each of the readings."

MAJOR • RUMSEY.

It was the proud boast of Mrs. Maltworth, widow of the late Captain Robert Maltworth, of the ——th Cavalry, proprietress of the Esmeralda Hotel, Seabreeze, that in each of the twelve years during which she had owned and managed the establishment on the shore at Seabreeze she had successfully brought two young people into relations with one another that had resulted in matrimony. To tell the truth, Mrs. Maltworth was a born matchmaker, as many a young lieutenant could have witnessed.

Mrs. Maltworth was one of those rare individuals who can sink their own discomforts and smile on the pleasures of others. It was largely due to this fact that the Esmeralda had prospered, and during the season its rooms were flooded with young people bubbling over with holiday spirits, who joked and laughed together as if the office and the counter were nothing more than mere imaginings which would not reappear at the expiration of a brief fortnight.

But Mrs. Maltworth and her two daughters were growing desperate. The season was rapidly growing to a close, and as yet no two young people had been attracted to each other. To be sure, there had been one or two mild flirtations which had excited considerable expectation, but they had not "developed" and had expired before the participants left Seabreeze.

"Here's a letter from a Major Rumsey, my dears," said the widow one morning. "He wants to come next Monday with his son and daughter to stay—why, he doesn't say how long he will stay?"

"Who is he?" inquired the elder of the Misses Maltworth, a prim young lady of 25, whose living interest was centered and circumferenced in the cutting down of expenses at the Esmeralda.

The widow passed the letter to her.

"He writes from Shoreham, you see, and that is very select. We shall have to put him and the son in the second floor front and his girl in the room opposite ours."

The younger daughter nodded approval. She was a pretty girl, who had all her mother's amiability and tenderness, mixed with her father's soldierly pride.

Major Rumsey duly arrived with his son and daughter. He was a middle-aged gentleman whose hair was generously sprinkled with gray, labeled military from head to foot, and possessed of a bluff, hearty voice that instantly won the widow's heart.

"I always feel thoroughly at home with army gentlemen," she confessed to him ere he had been in the house half a dozen hours. "You see, I'm a soldier's daughter and married a man who carried a commission.

"Madam," replied the Major, "you surprise and honor me."

"Yes, my poor husband, Captain Maltworth, of the ——th Cavalry——"

"What!" roared the Major, springing from his chair. "Your husband—old Bob Maltworth of the ——th?"

"The same, sir."

"My dear Mrs. Maltworth, this is indeed a pleasure. I and old Bob—er—Captain Maltworth, were mates together before—— Have you never heard him speak of his old friend Rumsey?

"Bless my soul, my dear lady," continued the excited Major, walking to the window. "Fancy coming across the widow of my old friend. The world is, after all, quite a little place; now, isn't it?"

The opening of the door and the entrance of Mabel caused him to turn round.

"Mabel, my dear, this is Major Rumsey—and—and he is an old friend of your poor papa's."

The Major bowed to the fair young girl before him, while she blushed and murmured, "How d'y' do" in so pretty a manner that the Major was on the instant charmed and captivated.

That evening there was a merry party in the widow's little drawing-room, which excited considerable curiosity among the other boarders. There was much laughter and just a few tears on the part of the hostess, and that night young Harold Rumsey dreamed of a blushing blue-eyed girl who had called him "Mr. Rumsey" no end of times, although he would have given anything to have been called Harold.

The visit of Major Rumsey, Mr. Harold Rumsey and Miss Eleanor Rumsey (to quote the Seabreeze News) was decidedly a time of unqualified enjoyment. The happiness of the three suffused through the whole of the Esmeralda Hotel, and the proprietress was heard to remark that never in all her life had she seen so jolly a company as her boarders at this period. The visit lengthened from a fortnight to three weeks, then to a month, and still the happy trio said nothing of leaving.

"It does my heart good to see these young people living so happily," said Mrs. Maltworth. "It makes me feel young myself, I confess."

The Major was standing at the casement, looking away over the sea. Outside the promenade was almost deserted, for the days were growing cold and sunless, but at the end of the thin line of beach, where it was cut off by the cliff that jutted out, he could see a woman and a man seated. Her hand was clasped in both of his, and as the old soldier watched he saw her head droop lower—lower.

"Mrs. Maltworth," he said, scarcely above a whisper, "come here. You see those two young people away there? They are our young people."

Together they watched the two, who, all unconscious that they were observed, were telling one another the sweetest story in the world.

The widow was the first to speak.

"I felt sure it would come," she cried. "Fancy, this is the thirteenth year without a break!"

"The thirteenth year!" thundered the Major. "Do you mean to tell me that the girl has for thirteen years——"

"Major Rumsey!" interrupted the little woman. And then she explained, and explained so well, that her listener became as enthusiastic as herself, and swore with a characteristic military oath that he could have desired no better mate for his lad.

Suddenly the widow started up.

"O, dear!" she cried in dismay. "It mustn't be. I was forgetting it's the 13th, and that would be unlucky. It was on the 13th that my poor Robert——"

"Nonsense, my dear madam," growled her listener. "Surely you don't believe in that old woman's tale!"

"But Robert——on the 13th——"

"—— Robert," the Major thundered, and immediately apologized. "I forgot myself. What I wanted to say is this: Why should we risk the happiness of our boy and girl?"

"Why, indeed?" murmured the lady.

"Suppose, for instance, two other people found they could join forces with advantage and advance on the enemy's line better together than singly. Suppose, I say—Mrs. Maltworth—Helen—what do you say to taking me?"—and here the Major flopped down on his knees in most unmilitary style—"me—an old half-pay officer without a friend in the world. Now, what shall we say?"

And like the soldier's daughter and the soldier's widow that she was, the blushing proprietress of the Esmeralda answered "Yes" with precision.

"YOU SURPRISE AND HONOR ME," SAID THE MAJOR.

This is how it is that the Esmeralda is "under entirely new management," and the young people who congregate there in the summer speak regretfully of the old days—the days that are no more.—Buffalo News.

OFFICER WORSTED FOR ONCE.

Policeman Failed to Arrest Two Drunken Men and a Big Dog.

Ever since he joined the force Policeman Andy Murray has made a specialty of the arrest of "drunks," a line of duty for which he seems to be peculiarly fitted, and in the exercise of which he takes great delight. It was because of his reputation for always landing his man at the nearest patrol box unassisted that he undertook to arrest two intoxicated individuals single-handed on Monday night, and thereby came to grief. Andy was standing at 224 and Diamond streets shortly after dark when he saw an oddly assorted pair leaning up against the gate of the Odd Fellows' cemetery, both evidently under the influence of liquor. One was a man attired in full dress, wearing a high silk hat, who was holding a big Newfoundland dog by a chain. The other was a bicyclist, who was apparently too far gone to ride, but who still held on to his wheel.

Patrolman Murray grabbed each by the shoulder and started for the patrol box, but the prisoners wanted to argue. The trio came to a halt; the dog ran around them a couple of times, winding up the chain, and then suddenly, espying a cat, made a wild dash for the other side of the street. The unsteady prisoners fell over like tenpins, dragging their captor with them. In his fall Murray jammed one foot through the spokes of the bicycle's front wheel and, unable to extricate himself, he lay at the bottom of the heap until a brother officer came to his assistance. He now acknowledges that he bit off more than he could "chew."—Philadelphia Record.

The Wealthiest Beggars.

The wealthiest known living professional beggar, Simon Oppasich, an Austrian, was born without feet or hands, and sympathy for his infirmities brought him a large fortune in the shape of alms. In 1880, when he was 47 years old, he had saved £12,000, and in 1888 he had increased his fortune by speculation to £25,000 in cash and about £40,000 in Trieste and Parenzo estates. Since then he has quadrupled his wealth by speculation on the bourse.

When Tori, a well-known Italian beggar, died last year, bank books, securities, gold and silver, and other articles, to the value of upward of £80,000, were found in his rooms. His heirs were two nephews, who had been existing in a state of miserable poverty for years.

A beggar who died in Auxerre, France, in 1895, was found to have bonds to the value of 1,000,000 francs in an old trunk and 400 bottles of wine of the vintage of 1790.

The French seem to be a generous nation, for in the same year an old woman, who lived in a wretched garret in the Rue de Sevres, Paris, died, leaving Government securities representing an annual income of £210, all made by begging.

A beggar named Gustave Marcelin, of Avignon, died in November, 1892, and left £20,000 in French Government bonds, to be divided equally between the city and the Bureau de Bienfaisance, the great French charity society.—London Mail.

A Serious Matter.

Truant scholars do not abound in Switzerland. If a child does not attend school on a particular day, the parent gets a notice from the public authority that he is fined so many francs; the second day the fine is increased; and by the third day the amount becomes a serious one. In case of sickness, the pupil is excused, but, if there be any suspicion of shamming, a doctor is sent. If the suspicion proves to be well founded, the parent is required to pay the cost of the doctor's visit.

At a million Thanksgiving dinner tables a million housekeepers said when the guests got around to pie: "I expect that pie is scorched a little on the bottom."

The Ruling Passion.

A celebrated musical critic was recently married in church, and after the ceremony, as the wedding procession marched down the aisle, the organist played the wedding march from "Lohengrin." When near the door, the bridegroom stopped in the march and addressed the wondering assembly thus:

"I know I am committing a breach of etiquette as well as propriety in doing this, but I am not to blame. It is my mental organization which has become ineffably sensitive by reason of the critical nature of my duties."

Then he drew from the pocket of his dress coat a well thumbed copy of the score of "Lohengrin." Opening it at the march, he went over to the organist and said:

"What offended my ear was the fact that in the seventeenth bar of the da capo passage you flatted very badly, and in the andante movement you slurred the appoggiatura. Now," putting his finger upon the passage, "let us try that again."

Once more the organ pealed forth, and this time the player, conscious that the great critic was listening to him, accomplished his duty with credit to himself and to the great satisfaction of the critic.—Pick Me Up.

A Postal Joke.

A west sider recently approached a certain postoffice official. His face was serious; so was his voice.

"Say," he said, "I don't think it's right for you to make your letter carriers do double duty."

"What do you mean?" exclaimed the official.

"Why, we've got a carrier over our way who is at it day and night."

"At what?"

"Why, he carries mails all day, and then has an extra male to carry at night."

The official looked puzzled.

"That's queer," he said. "I'll inquire into it." Then his face brightened up.

"Hold on," he cried. "What does that night mail weigh?"

"About nine pounds," said the citizen with a hoarse chuckle.

The official grinned.

"Guess he'll have to stand it," he said. "It's just a short route, you know."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A Prince as a Railway Guard.

Prince Chilkow, the Russian minister for railways, commenced his career by making a tour of the world in order to take note of all the latest inventions and to study the working of railroads abroad in a practical manner. He first of all worked as an ordinary mechanic in the locomotive works at Liverpool, after which he became a railway guard and afterward station master at an English town. Returning to Russia, he again worked as a mechanic and afterward as a station master. After passing several years on the Transcaspian railway he was made director of the Varsovie railway, then inspector general of railways and finally minister.—Paris Signal.

Harking Back.

Mrs. Acklins—I don't want to be impertinent, but how old are you anyway? Some of the ladies were discussing your age at the club the other day, and several of them claimed that you were at least 35, but I insisted that you were not more than 33.

Mrs. Biswick—I'm glad you were so kind. Of course you didn't mention the fact that you were ready to leave the grammar grade when I was in the primary class at school, did you?—New York World.

Why, of Course.

"I've called to tell you, sir, that the photographs you took of us the other day are not at all satisfactory. Why, my husband looks like an ape!" "Well, madam, you should have thought of that before you had him taken."—Household Words.

STORIES OF RELIEF.

Two Letters to Mrs. Pinkham.

Mrs. JOHN WILLIAMS, Englishtown, N. J., writes:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I cannot begin to tell you how I suffered before taking your remedies. I was so weak that I could hardly walk across the floor without falling. I had womb trouble and such a bearing-down feeling; also suffered with my back and limbs, pain in womb, inflammation of the bladder, piles and indigestion. Before I had taken one bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I felt a great deal better, and after taking two and one-half bottles and half a box of your Liver Pills I was cured. If more would take your medicine they would not have to suffer so much."

Mrs. JOSEPH PETERSON, 513 East St., Warren, Pa., writes:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I have suffered with womb trouble over fifteen years. I had inflammation, enlargement and displacement of the womb. I had the backache constantly, also headache, and was so dizzy. I had heart trouble, it seemed as though my heart was in my throat at times choking me. I could not walk around and I could not lie down, for then my heart would beat so fast I would feel as though I was smothering. I had to sit up in bed nights in order to breathe. I was so weak I could not do anything.

"I have now taken several bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and used three packages of Sanative Wash, and can say I am perfectly cured. I do not think I could have lived long if Mrs. Pinkham's medicine had not helped me."

SERMONS OF THE WEEK

Obedience.—Obedience to the spiritual laws of being brings us in sight of God.—Rev. D. V. Bowen, Swedenborgian, San Francisco, Cal.

Evolution.—Evolution furnishes a strong presumptive evidence in favor of individual immortality.—Rev. C. W. Wendte, Unitarian, Los Angeles, Cal.

Thoughts.—Stand forth under the stars and let the sense of the greatness of the Creator come down upon your spirit.—Rev. A. E. Myers, Collegiate, New York.

A Religious Nation.—A religious nation is not one having an established church and creed, but one where right is supreme.—Rev. Dr. Abbott, Congregationalist, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The God-like Spirit.—It is the God-like spirit to love all our fellow-citizens, and the spirit of Christian charity is one that we preach from our pulpits very often.—Father Malone, R. C., Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Fatherhood of God.—Jesus taught with intense earnestness the fatherhood of God, but he mortised in with its corollary the worship of man.—Rev. B. E. Howard, Congregationalist, Los Angeles, California.

Sacred Things.—Into whatever new experience you enter, remember that it is the most sacred things of your life that are to pass on before you and guide you.—Rev. W. J. Long, Congregationalist, Cambridge, Massachusetts.

God's Bidding.—If God in the logic of events bids us to carry beyond our borders a civilization whose focal points are the Bible and the cross, we must do his bidding.—Rev. E. Nelander, Lutheran, San Francisco, Cal.

Freedom.—We are all servants. Our freedom is simply liberty to choose our master. We are servants of sin or of Christ. It is for us to choose whom we serve.—Rev. Mr. Taylor, Presbyterian, San Bernardino, Cal.

Bible Study.—The one who studies the Bible aright will pray powerfully, live holy and work untiringly and effectively. Bible study is also important for those who are not Christians.—Rev. R. A. Torrey, Presbyterian, Chicago, Ill.

Opportunity.—God desires opportunity. He wants human hearts for temples, for homes. He hath need of thee. Let him come in and occupy, and he will fill and use and bless. He is the need of the church to-day.—Rev. S. Merritt, Methodist, New York City.

Life.—To some life is a battle, a conflict, a strife. Out of the battle the victory is won; out of the struggle comes the strength; out of the conflict comes power. To others life is a discipline.—Rev. A. C. Smithers, Christian Church, Los Angeles, California.

Unbelievers.—Unbelievers are really great believers. To deny the existence of God implies that you hold a creed of absurdities. To reject the divinity of Christ demands a creed of improbabilities and inconsistencies.—Rev. A. C. Dixon, Baptist, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Our Lord's Mission.—We need to bear in mind that until after the resurrection of our Lord the mission and scope of that life was but little understood, even by those whom he had in training for three years.—Rev. Mr. Rollins, Congregationalist, San Bernardino, Cal.

Needed Churches.—We need churches encourage thought, not to avoid but to encourage thought, not to avoid but to seek change. Such churches will have no trouble in distinguishing between liberty and license, freedom and lawlessness.—Rev. J. L. Jones, Unitarian, Chicago, Ill.

Utilitarian Standpoint.—There are some who regard religion from the utilitarian standpoint, speaking of it as a necessary thing for men, but really in the sense of a police force, for they make no distinction between Christianity and any other religion.—Rev. J. B. Nies, Episcopalian, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Christianity.—It is really not easy to see how Jesus Christ has done the things in the world he has done. It is not the book that has produced Christianity, but it is Christianity that has produced the Bible. Christianity was a fact long before the gospels were written.—Rev. Dr. McConnell, Episcopalian, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Few Class Distinctions in Siberia.

There is not much caste or class distinction in Siberia, and the few social rules are lax. The Russian Siberians mingle freely with the native tribes, and their customs and habits have, in consequence, been considerably modified. I have often seen groups of boys playing on the street, where the Kirghiz or Buriat boys were mixed indiscriminately with the Russians. From their dress or language it was impossible to distinguish them; for both costume and language were a strange mixture. Only the peculiar features of the native or the more slovenly appearance of the Russian would betray the slightest difference. It is an old saying that you "scratch a Russian and find a Tartar." It might be more appropriately said—at least, of the Russian peasant—that you scrape the dirt off a Russian and find a clean Tartar; for the latter are decidedly the more cleanly.

How He Won Her.

Tom—I'm surprised to hear of Dick's engagement to the wealthy Miss Antiquate. I was under the impression that she was a confirmed man-hater.

Jack—So she was, but Dick won her through diplomacy.

Tom—How so?

Jack—She asked him to order a bell for her bicycle and he told her that she didn't require another, as there was a belle on her wheel every time she rode it. After that he had everything his own way.

Swearing in Austria.

In Austria a Christian witness is sworn before a crucifix, between two lighted candles, and, holding up his right hand, says: "I swear by God, the Almighty and All Wise, that I will speak the pure and full truth, and nothing but the truth, in answer to anything I may be asked by the court."

He went to the war a vigorous farmer's boy and came back broken in health, a victim of sciatic rheumatism. Most of the time he was unfitted for manual labor of any kind, and his sufferings were at all times intense. He says: "Nothing seemed to give me permanent relief until three years ago, when my attention was called to some of the wonderful cures effected by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. I had not taken more than half a box when I noticed an improvement in my condition, and I keep on improving steadily. To them I owe my restoration to health. They are a grand remedy."—*Mt. INSISTED ON PAYING.

A Man Who Wouldn't Accept Legal Advice For Nothing.

The other day an old fellow slouched into Attorney Oscar Kahn's office, on Legal row, and introduced himself as Mr. Smith, Jones, Brown, or something, of a neighboring county. He said he wanted to consult a lawyer and was accorded a seat and one of the attorney's sweetest smiles.

He then explained that while he was away from home the sheriff or some deputy had attached his wife's sewing machine and bureau for taxes. He did not propose to tolerate such imposition, he declared.

"What is the amount of taxes?" inquired the lawyer.

"Lemme see—$1.28," was the reply.

The lawyer could not conceal a smile, but hastened to say: "Well, Mr. Smith, if you want my advice, it is to go back and settle that small amount. It looks like the easiest and best way out of it."

The old fellow thought a moment and replied that he believed he would. Answering, he asked, "How much do I owe you?"

"Oh, nothing, sir," was the reply. "I won't charge you anything for a little advice like that."

"But I allus pays fer whut I git and want ter pay yer jes' the same."

"Oh, that's all right; come in again some time when you need advice on something more important, and we'll square it then."

"Naw, I want ter pay it now. Jes' squeal out. Ef it's 25 cents, I'll pay it. Ef ye want 50, there it is!" And he threw down a half dollar and left.—Paducah (Ky.) Sun.

CALLING FOR MOTHER.

Always calling for his mother—never stops from morn till night;
Last words on his lips at bedtime; first words in the morning light.
Nothing ever seems to please him; nothing else he'll ever say
But—"I wants—I wants my mother!" * *
And his mother far away!

Always calling for his mother—give him this and give him that—
Rig him out in little breeches, and a ribbon round his hat;
Give him painted sticks of candy—still the same thing, night and day—
Always calling for his mother, and his mother far away!

Always calling for his mother! * * Well, at best the mother is Sweetest of our sweetest mem'ries, and her kiss the sweetest kiss!
Surely, when the darkness gathers—when the light has left the skies,
We shall meet in heaven the welcome of the mother's lips and eyes!

A TEAMSTER AT GETTYSBURG.

THE steamer from Newbern, that carried the wagon - train of which Jim Wright had charge, proceeded directly to Baltimore. At this place all of the officer's baggage and the camp equipage of the Seventy-sixth regiment were unceremoniously dumped out. The wagons were then reloaded with ammunition, placed with the mules on the cars and rushed to the front.

It was late in the afternoon of July second when Jim's wagons reached the vicinity of Gettsburg. All day they had heard the sound of cannon, and toward noon had met streams of wounded and squads of prisoners under guard.

Now officers were continually hurrying the trains forward, and as Jim's teams were in excellent condition, his train was in advance of the others. He could hear musketry rattling furiously over beyond the hills on the left side of the Taneytown road, when a staff officer came galloping up to the wagons.

"What have you in those wagons?" he demanded.

"Ammunition, sir; E. B. cartridges, calibre .58," answered Jim, promptly.

"Good! Get those wagons up to the front as quickly as possible! Kill your teams if necessary, but get there! The left of our line is being flanked, and the men are nearly out of ammunition. Hurry, for God's sake, hurry!"

"Show me where to go, captain, and I'll shove those wagons there as quick as mules can take them," answered Jim.

"Come on!" The officer dashed ahead. "I'll show you."

Black Sam, the foremost driver, lashed his mules into a run, and the others came galloping after, flanking a high, round hill with a smaller one beyond it, which hid the battlefield from the train, although the white smoke showed the location of the conflict. The captain led Jim's train off from the main road, up a spur of the smaller mountain, and then, looking down the side of the steep hill and out into the field beyond, Jim and Sam saw the Union line. Flashes and puffs of smoke beyond that marked the enemy's position.

A division of regulars was retiring slowly; on their left one battered brigade was stretched out in single rank, with their left flank "refused," or bent back like a door on a hinge.

"O, Lord, we are too late! The enemy are on our road!" shouted the officer, in dismay.

"Captain," said Jim, scanning the ground, "I can take a wagon down that hill, across that wheat-field, swing to the left, and give those boys ammunition."

"If you could you might save the whole army. But can you?" the captain cried.

The feat seemed impossible. The hill seemed too steep. The likelihood that the wagon would overrun the team and be upset, and the whole load lost, was very great. Once at the bottom, however, the teamster would be all right.

"I can tie a couple of dead mules to the hind end of the wagon, and they will act as brakes. I've let wagons down gulches worse than this," said Jim, confidently.

"But where are your dead mules?"

"Here, captain," and Jim pointed to the leaders of a team. "I'll tie them on behind the wagon, and," touching his pistol, "when we begin to go down the hill they'll be dead!"

"Good! good!" said the captain. "Go ahead; it's our only chance. Hurry! hurry! or anything you can do will be too late!"

"Sam," said Jim, addressing the black driver, who had but lately escaped from his native plantation. "I want you to drive your team down there."

"Yes, boss, I hear yo'," was the stolid answer.

"I'm going along with you, Sam," said Jim. "It's mighty hot down there; we may both be killed; but those cartridges have got to go to the boys in that line—understand?"

"Sergeant Jim," said Sam, "did de cap'n say that this wagon-load ob ca'tridges mont sabe de hull Linkum army?"

"That's what he said, Sam."

"Den, boss, I'se a-gwine er take dem ca'tridges dere. Niggers is cheap these days. Jes' yo' show de way. I'se a-gwine to stay wid yo'!"

"Bully boy, Sam! That's the kind of talk! We aren't killed yet, by any means, and I hope we won't be."

Then Jim, having pointed out the course he wished the negro to take, tied the two mules doomed to serve as brakes to the rear of the wagon, and stripped off the canvas cover. During these preparations, which occupied only a few minutes' time, Sam dismounted, and was patting the mules and calling each by name: "Jinny, Jinny, good lily gal! Yo', Bill, yo' long-eared rascal! 'Member ole Sam's a-dribing yo'," and similar words to all six of them.

"Come on!" yelled the officer.

Sam leaped into the saddle, cracked his whip, and shouted, "Git—yo'—all!" and the wagon started.

It was but a short distance to the summit; then came a steep, rough descent to the rolling field where the Union line was fighting. As they reached the crest, Jim looked back and saw the shining glow of musket barrels coming up the Taneytown road.

"That's the Sixth Corps!" cried the officer. "But oh, how slow they are!"

The troops were coming on the run!

Now Jim's revolver cracked twice, and two mules fell, shot through the head. Away the wagon went, plunging, bumping, crashing down the hill—no vehicle but an army wagon could have stood that jolting and even the army wagon, stable as it was, would have been dashed to pieces had not its speed been checked and its course steadied by Jim's ingenious brake. At the base of the hill Jim's keen knife severed the halters of the dead mules without slackening the speed of the team, and the wagon went flying toward the blue line.

The hissing, humming bullets were everywhere; splinters flew from the wagon-body, but on it sped; with a shriek Jim's horse stumbled and went down.

Jim sprang from the saddle and ran beside the team, shouting at the mules, and soon the wagon was in the rear of the forefront of the battle.

Back from the firing-line the sergeants came running, and eagerly seized the pine boxes of cartridges. A mule went down; his harness was quickly cut, and the wagon rolled on. The captain's horse was shot under him; he fell with it, and Jim and Sam saw him no more.

At the next halt, soldiers with powder-blackened lips, bloodshot eyes and ashen faces were round them, yelling, "Cartridges! cartridges! cartridges!" and more of the pine boxes were quickly pitched out and smashed, and the brown paper packages, ten cartridges in each, distributed to the men.

"Pass the word for the boys to hold on hard a little longer—the Sixth Corps is coming on the double quick, and is almost here!" shouted Jim, as he gave out the ammunition.

"They'll have to come might soon, or they'll be too late. More than half of our men have gone down, and the rest of them can't last but a few minutes longer," said a sergeant, wearing on his cap the red Maltese cross of the Fifth Corps. The leading mules had been shot down already; only three remained; but away went the wagon to the fighting left, Sam holding the leader by the head.

The men in the battle-line of the "refused" flank were in single rank—a thin line with many gaps—and their officers were bringing them cartridges from the boxes of the dead and wounded; for many a form in blue lay still, and more lay writhing on the red ground. The ranks of the gray were coming on in force, outflanking and enveloping the thin blue line, threatening to roll it up and utterly destroy the brigade. A Maine regiment sternly held the extreme left, but the men were falling so fast that it seemed incredible the wagon could be brought to them. Only two mules were left, and one of these, bleeding from a bullet-wound in the neck, already began to show signs of weakness, and could with difficulty be kept on the run.

But a slight hollow seemed to afford some protection, and Jim led Sam that way. They were almost there when a withering volley felled one of the remaining beasts. Instantly Jim's knife cut the beast out; then Sam, grasping the yoke on the wagon-pole, exerting all his strength, and yelling at the remaining mule, pushed alongside Jim from behind, and with one desperate final effort they rolled the wagon into the little hollow At that instant a bursting shell crashed over their heads, scattering its fragments in every direction, and the faithful negro and the last mule went down together.

The soldiers came running for the few remaining cartridges, and Jim Wright, picking up a musket which one of the wounded men had dropped, ran with them to the line.

"Stay with them, boys! stay with them!" he yelled. "The old Sixth Corps is almost here! Hurrah! hurrah! hurrah! there they come! There's the white cross, boys!"

Down the side of Little Round Top, in magnificent order, two full brigades came pouring on the run. Then the feeble cheer that went up from the hard-pressed line was drowned in the crashing volley that came from the troops of the Sixth Corps, whose advance struck the enemy's right flank, threw the men into disorder, and quickly drove them back to the shelter of the thick woods beyond the field.

The rays of the setting sun were touching the crest of Round Top when the firing ceased, and Jim Wright made his way back to the wagon in the hollow. There the black man still lay face downward, beside the dead mule, and a froth was on his lips.

Jim snatched from the wagon-box a canteen in which remained a pint or more of precious water, knelt beside his driver, raised his head, and poured a little water between his lips. The drops revived the wounded man; he opened his eyes, and a smile came over his face.

"De ca'tridges done got yere in time?" he gasped.

"Yes, Sam, they got here just in time," answered Jim.

"Den, boss, it's all right; me an' de mules don't mak' no count. Tell de boys," he whispered, painfully, "dat ole Sam—done stay by—de Linkum soldiers—as long as he las', an' now," proudly, "he's gwine ter die wid' 'em."

A group of powder-stained soldiers had gathered around the wagon, and Jim Wright was not ashamed of the tears that they saw coursing down his freckled face.

"He was black and a hero. He gave his life for his country as truly as any soldier," said Jim, a grizzled sergeant.

A wonderful light came into the eyes of the old sergeant, and he spoke some words to the nearest men. Then four of them, grimy from that long day of fighting, stooped about the form of the black man and lifted it very carefully, and carried it to where a long row of white heroes had already been arranged, dead, under the evening sky. There, gently, they laid Sam down in the place of soldiery honor, on the right of the line.—Youth's Companion.

QUEEN'S LONDON ADDRESS.

Victoria Says She Lives Opposite a Big Department Store.

The children of Prince Henry of Battenberg, who married Queen Victoria's youngest daughter, Princess Beatrice, and died of fever during the Ashanti campaign, live with their grandmother at Windsor. Recently two little girls from London came down to spend the day with the little Battenbergs, and it so happened that her majesty paid a visit to the nursery, and found them there.

The young visitors were taken aback; they had not expected to see the Queen, and had not been instructed how to conduct themselves in the presence of royalty; but they had been well brought up and knew their Bibles, and they thought at once of Daniel before King Darius. They decided that what Daniel had done must be correct, so the pair threw themselves on their faces on the floor at her astonished majesty's feet, and cried out with a loud voice:

"O queen, live forever!"

However, this proved an excellent introduction, and presently the Queen and they became great friends. She took one of them on her knee, and all three chatted together in the friendliest way.

"And whereabouts in London do you young people live?" asked the Queen.

"Oh," said the little girl on her knee, "we live just opposite W.'s," naming one of the new mammoth stores that have become such marked features of the London of to-day.

"But please won't you tell us where you live when you go to London?" said the other little friend.

The Queen looked thoughtful for a moment, and then remembered that in Buckingham Palace Road there is also a mammoth store. "Oh," said she smiling, "in London I live opposite Gorringe's."

RECENT INVENTIONS.

Celluloid is used in the manufacture of a new eye-shield, a thin sheet being cut to fit over both eyes and bound at the edge with a strip of thick felt, which rests against the face and shuts the eye in.

A German has designed a candle holder which will not drop grease, the candlestick carrying a tube with a spring at the bottom and a cap at the top, with a conical aperture through which the top of the candle is forced as it burns.

A Delaware inventor has designed a bell attachment for cyclometers, which is fastened to the under side of the casing, with a spring clapper running up to connect with a pin on one of the wheels of the cyclometer to ring the bell at every mile.

Cyclers are protected from rain and sun by a new umbrella attachment, which is clamped on the top bar of the frame and can be tipped down by loosening a thumbscrew so that the tip rests on the ground when the wheel is not in use to support it.

Furnace doors can be easily opened without touching with the hands by the use of a new improvement, a lever being pivoted on the floor to be stepped on at one end and lift the opposite end, raising an upright rod attached to the door to swing it open.

Passengers on railroads are automatically registered by a new photographic apparatus, designed to be placed in the top of the car and having an automatic flash-light operator, which is discharged as a person steps on the platform to enter the car, exposing the film at the same time.

The hair can be shampooed by a new machine without touching the hands to the head and the dust or lather is gathered up and prevented from getting on the clothing, a hood being placed over the head, with a flexible casing at the top which is moved over all parts of the head.

One Way to Clean Teeth.

When the Brahmin cleans his teeth he must use a small twig cut from one of a number of certain trees, and before he cuts it he must make his act known to the gods of the woods. He must not indulge in this cleanly habit every day. He must abstain on the 6th, the 8th, the 9th, the 14th, the 15th and the last day of the moon, on the days of new and full moon, on the Tuesday of every week, on the day of the constellation under which he was born, on the day of the week and on the day of the month which correspond with those of his birth, at an eclipse, at the conjunction of the planets, at the equinoxes and other unlucky periods and also on the anniversary of the death of his father or mother. Anyone who cleans his teeth with his bit of stick on any of the above mentioned days will have hell as his portion.

Blame the Kansas City Star if you don't believe this rat story. It is about how the eggs got away from the drug store soda fountain. The clerk says he was awake and saw it all. This is the tale:

"With the stealth of Spaniards two sharp-eyed fellows approached and climbed upon the soda counter. Selecting an egg at the edge of the basket the bigger of the two rats clasped it with all four feet, holding it close to his body. Then a third rat appeared and threw himself on his back on the counter, directly under the rat who clasped the egg, about four inches above him.

"These details being completed, the second rat laid hold of the first rat's tail and pulled him off the basket, and, presto! the rat lying on his back caught him and the egg was safely landed on the counter.

"In a jiffy rat No. 2 and rat No. 3 dragged their living egg along the marble counter to a place underneath where a shelf projected out. Here the two rats scampered down out of view behind the counter, first leaving the rat holding the egg at the very edge.

"Next the rat acting as the egg-sled deliberately dropped over the edge, back downward. The clerk did not see the rest of the proceedings, but supposes the rats underneath caught him. At any rate, in a few moments the two rats appeared, swiftly dragging their comrade and the egg across the floor on his back."

Patty's Poppies.

You see Patty liked red. That's why she wore red dresses and big red hats and planted a whole big paper of red poppy seeds in her little garden beside the fence!

And every night Patty watered this garden and pulled out the tiny weeds, each and every one of them, and waited and watched and longed for her poppy plants to grow! But never a one could she find, although she hunted and hunted.

"I don't believe those poppies will ever come up, ever!" sighed little 4-year-old Patty sorrowfully. "An' it's 'cause the seeds were so little! They were all tiny wee baby seeds, 'most too little to grow!"

"Humph!" said brother Ned. "It's 'cause you planted them away down deep!"

"Yes," declared sister Sue, "an' it's 'cause you watered them so much you drowned them!"

But what do you guess uncle John said? And he owns two large greenhouses and ever so many great gardens, and so he ought to know, my dear.

"Patty," he said, very solemnly, "it's because you pulled them up! You pulled up every weed and you pulled up every sprouted poppy seed!"

"Ha! ha!" shouted brother Ned.

"He! he!" laughed Sue.

"O-oh!" said Patty, in surprise. And then she ran away to buy some more seeds, only this time they were nasturtiums. "For they'll be big enough to see them," she said.—Youth's Companion.

Shower of Hats and Shoes.

Charles F. W. Mieglatz contributes "A Boy's Recollection of the Great Chicago Fire" to the St. Nicholas. Mr. Mieglatz says: Once, for a few minutes, I thought it was all over with me. The flames sprang from the middle of the block, on the east side of Wells street, between Washington and Randolph, to the middle of the block between Randolph and Lake streets. Here a remarkable thing happened. At the northwest corner of Wells and Lake streets I stopped for a moment to catch my breath and to look back. At the southeast corner there was a boot and shoe shop, which had a glass front on the rear alley, similar to that on the street front, but not so elaborate. The fire struck this alley front with a force that swept the boots and shoes through the shop and into the street in a flash. A tongue of flame shot out, rolled across the street, and kindled a tar-kettle and a barrel, such as pavers use, bringing with it a shower of boots and shoes. Almost at the same instant the fire threw itself against a hat factory, a few doors east of the boot and shoe shop. It hit the rear of the building with the same impelling force, and the hats flew up into the air like spray.

Slang from Ancient Rome.

Passing through a vacant lot the other day where some boys were having a game of ball, I heard one of them who had got a rap on the knuckles from a "foul," exclaim, "Jiminy, that hurts!" and then, after rubbing his fingers for a moment, he went back to his place on the field, little dreaming that he had just uttered a solemn invocation to the old Roman demigods Castor and Pollux. For our vulgar "jiminy" is but a corruption of the Latin "gemini," twins, a name implied to Castor and Pollux, the twin sons of Jupiter and Leda. These hero gods were the patrons of games and festivals of all kinds, and the especial friends of travelers; hence, when an old Roman exclaimed, "O Gemini!" it was a devout appeal to the gods for help or protection, very much the same as when a knight of old called on his patron saint.—St. Nicholas.

An English Cow.

A little London girl visiting relatives in the country was sent to a neighbor's for milk. The neighbor's cow had ceased to give milk for the time, and there was none to be had.

"There is no milk to-day," said the little girl on her return.

"No milk?" said the aunt. "What is the matter?"

"She didn't tell me what was the matter," was the reply; "but I s'pose the cow ain't laying just now."—New York Tribune.

Their Wit Saved Them.

The Bektashee is an influential order of dervishes which no Sultan has ever been able to suppress, relates the San Francisco Wave. At one time when they were in exceptionally bad odor rival orders endeavored to induce Sultan Mahmoud the Second to suppress the Bektashee. His majesty determined to put the unpopular brethren to a test. He accordingly gave a banquet, to which he invited all the principal dervishes in Constantinople. What was the surprise of his guests to find that each was supplied with a spoon having a handle a yard long! They looked at each other and shrugged their shoulders and wondered what it would mean. "Come, come," cries the Sultan from his throne at the upper end of the room, "why do you not eat your pilaf?" The dismayed looks of the dervishes plainly indicated the puzzled condition of their minds. Suddenly, to the intense amusement of the commander of the faithful and of the company in general, the Bektashee began to feed each other mutually across the table with their gaint spoons. "Well done!" cried the padishah, clapping his hands with delight, "you are indeed progressive and sensible men, oh Bektashee, and I shall not suppress your order to please these idiots, who are so dull of comprehension."

The Points of a Cat.

A good cat—the kind you want to have in the house, if any—will have: A round, stubby pug nose; full fat cheeks and upper lip; a well-developed bump on top of the head between the ears, betokening good nature. A sleepy cat that purrs a good deal is apt to be playful and good-natured. By all means to be avoided is a cat with thin, sharp nose and twitching ears. It must be remembered also that a good mouser is not necessarily a gentle or desirable pet. Although any good cat will catch mice if she is not over-fed, quick, full, expressive eyes generally betoken a mousing cat. The greatest mistake—and probably the most common one—in the care of domestic cats is overfeeding, particularly too much meat. In the wild life a cat has exercise which enables her to digest food. In the lazy house life the same full feeding leads to stomach troubles and to "fits."

An Erroneous Belief.

Speaking of the relation of employer to employe, the remark is frequently made that if the later performs his duties satisfactorily, his private character is nothing to the man or corporation that employs him. This is a fallacious idea, however. In railroads, banks and other lines of business there is strict watch kept upon the habits of employes, and if they are known to be spending their spare hours in dissipation it is not long before they are dropped from their positions. Employers know that it is only a question of time when fast living means stealing.

Lost at Sea.

"The speaker seemed all at sea."

RIGHT ABOUT FACE!

LADIES' WAISTS THE SAME FRONT AND BACK.

New and Attractive Garniture for Them—Street Gowns Remain Very Simple, but There Is Much Detail in Their Trimming—A Beautiful Wrap.

New York correspondence:

RUN the trimming of your dressy bodice around to the back if you want to. A fashionable woman these days can carry out the order "Right about face!" without making much difference in her looks above the belt. That is, there is as much elaboration about the trimming of the back of her bodice as the front, and usually the same lines are followed. The yoke that is a part of the decoration of the front is a part of the back also, and there is no change in the shape, the suggestion of a front, vest or waistcoat that is so often a part of the front scheme being followed in the back in a panel. Both in front and back the supply of trimming is most liberal.

Naturally with trimmings called upon to do so much, there is a demand for new ones, and it is answered by a lot of new and attractive garnitures. One of the prettiest is soft ruching of crinkled lawn or chiffon, the edges finished with a tiny frill of the same, the frill, in turn, edged with crinkled baby ribbon. A very dainty fluffiness is thus made. Another trimming may be styled an all-over passementerie that has a lot of up-standing frill continuous from the edge of the collar so that no neck-band line showed. That is a fine trick for the woman a trifle short-necked. The cuffs were trimmed to match, and a little waistcoat of bright red—not blue as you would expect—showed below the bust line. Bright red lined the skirt. A hat of silver gray fur, trimmed with a great red velvet rosette and a pair of delicate gray wings threaded with black, and a black muff attested to the wonderfully skillful management of colors that now prevails with the best designers.

Next to this was another gown that was severe about the throat. It was in green cloth. Its standing collar was beautifully shaped, and laced up the front to the tip of the chin. That is a new idea and is much more comfortable than hooking or buttoning. Besides, the collar is thus held absolutely immovable. Though the blouse front has rather gone out, except for Persian lamb coats, all its slenderness of effect is secured by the very clever shield front now fashionable. An excellent example of this is shown here. One feature of the scroll braiding that trimmed this gown was artful. It was the little notch between the curve of the scroll and the cut of the shield. That is to prove the coat bodice worn over an under-bodice. Yet the bit of color that showed there and pretended to be the edge of the under-bodice was only the belt of the coat. There really wasn't a to-match under-bodice, though there may be a silk or flannel waist with such a coat.

Many fine dressers feel that to be up to date they must wear a redingote, or at least, something of the fashionable order. The redingote costume shown had a round bodice of black cloth open over a red waistcoat strapped with gray broadcloth. The black cloth overskirt appeared to be continuous with the bodice, and opened to show a skirt of red strapped with gray. The overdress sloped to the foot of the skirt at the back, but rounded off at the sides. The straps on the sleeves were red, the high collar was lined with red and the tie was white silk.

There are countless variations of the polonaise idea. A very odd one appears in the third of the accompanying illustrations. The gown would be a belted princess but for the curious cutting away of the bodice at the back and of the skirt on the hips and just under the belt. The chenille dotted silk that showed here matched a yoke which the bodice opened to show. The dress goods was a heavy wool moire in dull gray. Black chenille knots dotted white silk in the trimmings, and the embroidery was black chenille.

Such street dresses, as has been said above, constitute a temptation to ignore wraps of all sorts. On the other hand, the most fashionable wraps are mighty fine feathers; never were they more beautiful. Certainly there is small danger of women tiring of them so long as they are as beautiful as the one the artist puts here. It was soft dull rose satin covered with chenille embroidered black net. Knowing that a deep flounce of the net hung just short of the edge of the satin, you will have an idea of the lovely color scheme. A tiny edge of chenille topped the flounce, and a yoke of the net had for finish a fold of the beautiful hood, which swept to the front. Sable tails finished collar and hood, and the whole was lined with delicate blue silk. The cloak was even more beautiful when the hood was lifted. It was arranged to roll just back of the hair ornament.

Winter weather has brought conditions of pavements that have afforded fine opportunity for studying the proper and the popular manner of holding up the long skirt. Street sweepers is the name for the new length of skirt, even with wearers of it. The study has resulted mostly in amusement, but it has also raised a hope that leaders or makers of women's fashions have seen the ungraceful attitudes, and that they will fancy such a pose for themselves and banish the long skirt.

on chills, for they'll surely prefer these jaunty street rigs to ugly, baggy "warm things." Almost all dresses, street or house, are open about the throat, either to show a yoke or to allow the escape of some fluffiness of a color lighter than the dress. Those who dislike this as "fussy" can find here two models severely plain about the neck. One is the stunning tailor rig at the left in the group. Of a lovely shade of gray broadcloth, it buttoned close to the throat. A yoke effect of braiding did not interfere with its severity, and consisted of tiny rows of tight twisted chenille cord in bright blue. These were set on by hand,

ISSUED EVERY FRIDAY.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.,

FRIDAY, MARCH 3 1899

The Assembly recently passed by unanimous vote the Dibble bill, making it a felony for any candidate for the United States Senate to pay money to a candidate for the Legislature, and a felony also for the legislator to receive such money. The bill will undoubtedly pass the Senate and will become a law. It is eminently just and proper that a practice unanimously condemned by public opinion and punished by law in many States in the Union should recieve a place among the category of crimes for which the penitentiary exacts retribution. At the time Mr. Grant gave Howard Wright his check of $750, to be followed presently by a gift of $900 cash from Mr. Grant's manager, it was not a felony according to the laws of the State, and neither Grant, Green nor Wright can be punished for the offense. The same is true with reference to Mr. Grant's other gifts of large sums to other legislators. Morally, however, the deed was just as bad before this law was framed as it is now, or as it will be after the bill passes into a law.

The location of numerous claims by single individuals in any one district is a subject for legislation. In a single district in San Diego county one man had located 160 claims. These required by law the performance of $16,000 in labor or other improvements annually, but the claim holder did not spend $190 on the entire lot, still he could and did keep other men who were willing to work from locating any of his claims. This wholesale location of mineral ground should not be permitted. Of course the new ninety-day law is calculated to make this impossible, but most men prefer not to undertake the location of a piece of ground in the face of an adverse claim and possibly expensive litigation, which is almost certain to result should he find a valuable ore body.

Here's the way Professor Jordan of Stanford University sizes up the way the Philippine question has been handled by President McKinley: "Providence is not at the helm in this expansion idea, and is working through no 'strong arm.' We have a president with many virtues, who never had an idea of his own, and a Secretary of War who knows nothing about war. I am a Republican, and I must admit that no administration has ever shown such conspicuous inaptitude in the divorcing of politics from statesmanship as the present one."

Whatever may be thought of the merits of the controversy between Schley Sampson concerning the battle at Santiago Harbor, the fact remains that the original thrusting of Captain Sampson over the heads of almost everybody in the Navy, solely because he happens to be a brother-in-law to the Secretary of the Navy, was about as shameful an imposition as was ever perpetrated on our gallant seadogs.

Assemblyman Caminetti has a bill in the Legislatnte to do away with all treating by candidates. It makes a clean sweep. No candidate shall "set 'em up for the boys" any more, not even a cigar or soda water. To bestow a smile upon an honest voter will make him as bad as Simpson. Any infraction of the law is made punishable by imprisonment from one to seven years.

That England has on hand a little affair in Egypt wherein the death rate is likely to make that of th Spanish-American war seem trivial is a circumstance which the people of this country have hardly considered worth noting. This thing of spreading civilization among the benighted, while it is an established habit, nevertheless comes high.

Simpson is now on the Call's "roll of dishonor." If Burns is eventually elected Senator he can thank the two Republican papers of San Francisco for the successful ending of his struggle. The spirit of fairness inherent in Californians rebels at the fight that these two papers have made against Col. Burns.

H. E. Huntington is on his way from New York to San Francisco with instructions from C. P. Huntington to expedite the work of filling in the gap on the coast division between Surf and Elwood, Cal., a distance of fifty miles. The estimated cost of this new piece of road is about $2,000,000.

Since Dewey has called for the Oregon there is no doubt he will get it. If there is anything Dewey wants all he has to do is to say so.

TWIGS AND LEAVES.

Experimental orchards are often conducted at considerable expense instead of profit.

A mulch of straw or coarse manure will be found very beneficial to newly set fruit trees during the summer.

The best time to water plants is late in the evening, as then the plants have moisture and coolness until morning.

In order to make the most out of the garden, whenever one crop is past use for the kitchen clean it up and plant something else.

Peach grubs should be looked after now. Gum exuding at the root and excrement is a good sign of their presence. Hunt and kill them.

Dishwater from the kitchen and the wash water on wash day make a good fertilizer to apply around fruit trees and plants.

The tops and roots of trees grow much alike in some respects. If the tops are long and slender, then the roots are also. If the tops are short and spreading, the roots are also.—St. Louis Republic.

Tomatoes For Truckers.

The Maryland station recommends the following varieties to truckers, as they produce a good crop of smooth tomatoes, and if they should not have sale for them for immediate use they are of a quality that can be disposed of to the canners to advantage, and these varieties will also continue to bear well for a considerable period:

Paragon	Red	9
Prize Taker	Purplish	7
Perfection	Red	9
World's Fair	Red	8
Climax	Purplish	9

Watering Apparatus For Melons.

A bulletin of the Georgia station on watermelons describes a simple method of rendering concentrated fertilizer assimilable or available and preventing the hill from firing. This is by the application of water artificially, when the rainfall proves insufficient. For this purpose a joint of two inch terra cotta sewer pipe is perpendicularly sunk in the hill before planting to the depth of six or eight inches, bell upward, as indicated in the figure.

The seeds are planted around the pipe and the stand subsequently thinned down to one vine, whose roots will eventually surround the bottom of the pipe for quite a distance in all directions. The pipe itself should be filled with water late in the afternoon—every day, if the weather is dry, or as often as may be found necessary. The continuous supply of moisture thus afforded will have a most noticeable effect by rendering every particle of plant food within reach capable of assimilation. Ordinary drain tile may be used in place of sewer pipe.

Embossed Designs on Stationery.

During the past few years the craze for embossed designs on fashionable stationery has extended until it is now accepted as a mark of good taste. The Parisian fashion of inclosing a small and dainty monogram in a circle has been broadened and extended to include ovals, diamonds, wreaths, shields, garters, bowknots or crests, each inclosing a dainty monogram or initial, says The Art Interchange in presenting some examples of these.

Some dies are stamped in colors, some in bronzes and some in a combination of both, as pink and gold, silver and mauve, gold and blue, or pink and silver. Perfectly smooth and unruled paper is preferable. As for color, delicate tints of bluish tones are the favorites. The design should be printed in the center of the sheet, half an inch from the upper edge. For men's stationery the designs are much bolder and are not inclosed. The envelopes are in no case stamped with the monogram, although the residence address may appear thereon.

An Odd Little Napkin Ring.

An odd little napkin ring which is quickly made, inexpensive and satisfactory rapidly at fairs, is illustrated by The Standard Designer. To make it requires 12 brass rings about the size of a cent and ribbon of any preferred color about half an inch in width.

Place the rings so that they half overlap each other, being careful that they all lap one way. Then twist, or, rather, interlace, the ribbon through the ovals made by the overlapping, bringing it always over the overlying side of the ring and under the underlying side. When the ribbon has been laced through all the rings, it should be drawn rather tightly to form the whole into a circle, and the ends tied in a bow.

SHERIFF SALE.

BY VIRTUE OF AN EXECUTION, ISSUED out of the Justice's Court of Fifth Township, County of Inyo, State of California, and to me directed and delivered, for a judgment rendered and entered in said Court, on the 8th day of August, 1897, in favor of J. B. Dover and against L. B. Harrison, I have levied on the following property, to wit: An undivided one half interest in that certain water right known as the "Wingfield and Harrison" water claim, commencing at a monument of stone on the north side line of Jim Cooper's mill site location and running along said line east forty rods thence north 40 rods, thence west 40 rods, thence south 40 rods to place of beginning. In Six Mile Canyon in South Park Mining District, Inyo County, State of California. Also,

An undivided one half interest in that certain mine or mining claim known as the "Mystic Tee." This claim is located about three miles southeast of South Park spring, in the panamint range of mountains, on the west side of said range in South Park Mining District, Inyo County, California.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that on the 4th day of February, 1899, at one o'clock p. m. of that day, in front of the Justice's office in the town of Ballarat, County of Inyo, I will sell all the right, title and interest of said L. B. Harrison in and to the above described property, at PUBLIC AUCTION, for cash, gold coin in hand to the highest and best bidder, to satisfy said execution and all costs.

A. M. GIVEN, Sheriff.

Dated the 18th day of January, 1899.

Good reports come from the Fish Spring District. All the miners there are doing well.

Jimmy, the youngest son of County-clerk Hession, has been ill for the past week. Nothing serious is apprehended.

A fine lot of early rose seed potatoes has been received at Rhine's. They'll go like hot cakes so get your orders filled at once.

J. C. Roeper has a lot of fresh oysters on hand. They are about the last of the season and if you want any you had better get 'em quick.

All persons interest in the waters of Oak Creek are requested to meet at the school house, Camp Independence, at 10 o'clock a. m. on Saturday, March 11.

J. J. Gunn came in from Minnietta yesterday and will return Monday. He has shipped a lot of ore which yielded good returns and has about forty tons on hand which Wm. Arcularius will haul at once for shipment to San Francisco. Mr. Gunn has had ten men employed.

George McCaffrey was examined by Doctors Blair and Dorrance last Wednesday evening and they agreed that the patient was insane. He was sent to the insane asylum Thursday in charge of Under Sheriff Willis and Charley Rose.

Assemblyman Mack and Gen. W. E. F. Deal arrived at Independence last Friday where they were engaged on legal business. Mr. Mack returned to Sacramento Tuesday where he expects to attend the Legislature for a couple of weeks yet.

The following are the names of those on the Roll of Honor for good deportment for the month ending February 28, at Milton School: Lester Gorman, Charlie Aguirre, Alvie Gill, Pauline Aguirre, Alice McGann, Edith Gorman.

IDELLE D. GREGORY, Teacher.

Arthur M. Squires and E. Newman come down from Mazourka last Monday and took the train for Los Angeles the same evening. Mr. Newman is quite enthusiastic on the subject of the Mazourka placers and will spend several thousand dollars in development work during the coming summer.

D. Sullivan, a prominent dentist from San Francisco, who has been doing an extensive business at Bridgeport and Bodie has decided to visit Independence Monday, March 6th, and also Bishop just as soon as he can complete his Lone Pine visit. The Doctor is a man of large experience and wonderful success, his work is first class and what is better, his charges are very reasonable.

There is a strong belief that the C. & C. will soon be extended as far as Darwin. We earnestly hope that it will be verefied. It will open up a country which contains vast quantities of low-grade shipping ore, which cannot be handled profitably under existing conditions. It would mean the employment of a great number of men, with all the attendant benefits.

The Water Question.

The action of the Senate in raising to $35,000 the appropriation in the Agricultural bill for an irrigation investigation is potent with great possibilities of benefit, not only to those who are farming irrigated lands, but to farmers everywhere who are studying to increase both product and profit by improved methods of cultivation. The first appropriation of $10,000 was secured from the last Congress through the efforts of Senator Warren of Wyoming, who is a strong friend of irrigation. Supervision of the work under this former appropriation was assigned to the Director of the Experiment Station, Dr. A. C. True, who has laid out the work along comprehensive lines. In his report Dr. True says: "Professor Elwood Mead, State Engineer of Wyoming, who has had a long and successful career as a student and administrator of irrigation problems in the west, has been selected as consulting expert and chief assistant in planning and carrying on this irrigation work which this office has undertaken. The following statement from Prof. Mead may serve to show some of the ways in which the department can profitably work: "The first purpose of this investigation is to aid farmers now living on irrigated land. To do this it is proposed to collect and publish the available data relative to water-rights, this to include the methods of acquirement, the control of streams and ditches by States and individuals, and a discussion and publication of the laws and methods of using and distributing water in the several arid States, and in other countries. The diversion and control of streams have created a number of new and novel problems for which lawmakers, courts or farmers have as yet no adequate solution. These are already assuming an importance which makes it manifest that the security of the irrigated home and the success of the settlers on irrigated land are likely to depend largely ppon their equitable settlement. In irrigated regions values do not inhere in land, but in the water which fertilizes it. No amount of industry and skill on the part of a husbandman will bring a satisfactory result unless with it there goes effective and just control of the stream from which he and others draw their common supply. In this matter the individual is helpless. His success depends on his obtaining his proper share of the water supply, and this does not rest on his own efforts, but on proper administrative regulations. Our lack of knowledge of these facts, and the comparative rapidity with which we have grown have caused the use of water to outrun the laws to govern its economical use or just disposition. As a result irrigated farms are threatened with controversies and litigation which, if not averted, must prove disastrous. There is need of systematic investigation to determine the volume of water used in the growth of crops, both to determine the redurements of different crops and of different climates, and to determine the relation between the variations in the demands of crops and the fluctuations in the flow of streams. This information is needed as a basis for the proper diversion of streams by administrative officers. It is needed by canal builders in order to properly design these structures. It is needed by farmers to promote the saving of water, and thus limit losses losses through an inadequate supply, or to extend the acreage which can be cultivated. It is most thoroughly needed, however, to guide in the making of just and proper water right decrees. In the disposal of streams, courts cannot properly fix the volume to which appropriators are entitled. Until they know how much water irrigators beneficially use they cannot decide how much they should receive. These measurements should be made to show the utility of storage reservoirs and the part they can be made to perform in both saving the crops of farmers now along streams and making it possible for others to settle there. Without a definite knowledge of the variations which exist between the use of water in different months of the irrigation season and the fluctuation in the discharge of a stream, we can only conjecture as to the amount of flood water available for storage. A recent investigation of this question shows an almost entire absence of data on this subject. In only three States has there been any public determination of the volume of water actually used in irrigation, and these have neither embraced the range nor been continued over a sufficient period to enable them to be regarded as conclusive. In their efforts to promote reclamation the different States have pursued different methods. In some States corporations have been given almost unrestricted ownership of streams in order to secure the building of canals to divert their waters. In others the ditches are private property, but the water is under private control. In others irrigation works are being built by State or municipal appropriations, which are being paid for by general or local taxation. All the facts in connection with these different methods ought to be collected and published."

Senator Perkins of California in urging the adoption in the Senate of the amendment making this appropriation, said: "I believe there is no money appropriated in this bill which will bring back better return for the investment than that which is appropriated for irrigation investigation. The problem is one which affects all of the great States west of the Missouri river, for all of them have a vast area of land which is now arid and neither useful for pasture nor for cultivation. In the States of Wyoming, Utah, Nevada, California and in many of the other States of the central and southern portion of our country there is a great area of arid land belonging to the Government which is entirely useless for cultivation or for grazing purposes, because there is no water upon them, and the rainfall being so very light, there is not sufficient moisture to furnish irrigation. I do not think I overstate its value when I say that irrigation and reclamation of land is the most important economic problem that we have before us to-day.

Warning To Sheepmen.

REDLANDS, Calif. Feb. 25, 1899.

EDITOR INDEPENDENT:

Dear Sir:—

The accompanying item will be of interest to many of your readers; and certainly the fact stated should be made known as promptly and as widely as possible to the sheepmen. Under date of February 13th the Land Office in Washington writes, relative to the grazing of sheep upon the Reserves: "There was a temporary concession, for special reasons, granted last season; but you will inform all parties in interest that the Rules and Regulations of June 30 1897, reissued August 5th, 1898, are still in force, and that a strict compliance therewith will be enforced to the end that no sheep will be allowed on the Sierra and Stanislaus Reserves.

The various aspects of the question have been fully presented to the Department, and this decision has been arrived at only after very deliberate and careful consideration.

Sincerely Yours,
CHARLES S. NEWHALL
Forest Superintendent.

Good Roads.

It is a good omen that the convention of supervisors is discussing at some length the practical part of road building. Some able papers have been read on the subject and good should come from comparison of experiences of how and how not to build roads. A Stockton supervisor has this to say on the value of good highways: "Estimates carefully made place the possible saving of $531,000,000 a year if we had good roads, in the place of those at present existing. As $4,000 a mile would pay for a road nearing the perfection of a railroad, it can be seen that 135,000 miles of perfect roads would be constructed in one year from the waste now suffered. But saving does not stop here; farmers would not need so large an investment in wagons and animals and would also have less expense in marketing and operating and keeping roads in order, save time in trips to and fro, and over these good roads over short hauls could at all times compete with railroads and save themselves freight.

GERMANY AND ASIA MINOR.

It is inevitable that Asia Minor shall eventually pass from the possession of Mohammedanism, and whether Germany accomplishes the task or not, the Sultan must yield to a Christian nation. It is just as inevitable that diseases of the digestive organs must yield to Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. The disorders of this kind are usually called dyspepsia, constipation and biliousness. The Bitters are equally good for all such complaints, regardless of the name.

The Ambition to Be "Literary."

The reading club on the whole has been a blessing as an educational influence, but there are cases where light drafts from the literary spring have not been beneficial. It must be owned that an ambition to become literary, when aroused in a shallow mind, often has the effect of unfitting it for probabilities of achievement, while failing to refit it for possibilities. To the superficial woman whose desire is to get into the trend of the fashion the "paper" of the literary club becomes a delusion and a snare. It tempts to mental masquerading and plagiarism and in many cases has robbed women of needed rest and of a naturalness that is part of their charm. Having no very original thoughts of a given subject and no well defined idea of its proper treatment, she takes the reference books, not as suggestive helps, but in the way of completion, and so unconsciously often becomes a cheat and subjects herself to intellectual demoralization.—Mary R. Baldwin in Woman's Home Companion.

The Congregation Smiled.

Two country clergymen had agreed to exchange pulpits on a certain date. One of them made the following solemn announcement to his congregation on the Sabbath previous to the event:

"My dear brethren and sisters, I have the pleasure of stating that on next Sunday morning the Rev. Zachariah B. Day will preach for you. Let us now sing two verses of hymn No. 489, 'That Awful Day Will Surely Come.'"

And it took him some time to discover why the congregation smiled.—Syracuse Standard.

Quieting Her Doubts.

A lady selecting a hat at a milliner's asked cautiously, "Is there anything about these feathers that might bring me into trouble with the Audubon society?"

"Oh, no, madam," said the milliner, who was from London. "These feathers, madam, are the feathers of a howl, and the howl, you know, madam, is more of a cat than a bird."—Boston Transcript.

"Why don't you marry him?" they asked of the beautiful girl.

"I do not love him," she replied.

"Tut, tut," they said. "Don't be old fashioned. He is worth a million and is already on the brink of the grave."

A Changed Man.

THEY were standing before a perfumery shop in Bond street as I passed them—two young ladies of manifestly good society, so refined was their appearance and so perfectly correct their tenure. I could not help half turning, and who should they be but that archtease of a cousin of mine, Sybil Vane, and her bosom friend, Gwen O'Hara. It was Sybil that had spoken, and she said:

"Fancy that little fool throwing herself away on a man like that when she knows he only wants her for her money."

"What little fool and what man?" I asked, as I raised my hat by way of apology for the intrusion.

"Oh, you men! You never know anything," said Sibyl, when she had recovered from the shock my question had evidently occasioned.

"Then tell me," I rejoined. "You never have any secrets from me, you know—at least, not for long."

"Why, Honor Beaumont and Capt. Faulkiner, to be sure."

"Are they engaged to be married?"

"Of course they are, and he hasn't a penny, while she has a mil—l—ion."

"Well, he's a very handsome fellow, and she is—passable."

"They say he cheated at cards, that he's in everybody's debt, and is nothing short of a mere adventurer. And yet Honor Beaumont has accepted him! I say it's really too bad of her."

I had known Faulkiner for some years, and I am bound to say I had very little to urge in his defense. He had never been actually caught in any nefarious proceeding, but it was known that he had run through most of his friends, and that he was wonderfully lucky at faro, and that he was anxiously looking for an heiress.

The wedding took place, and about four months afterward Captain and Mrs. Faulkiner were back in town, apparently the happiest people to be found in all Belgravia.

As for Faulkiner, he seemed completely changed. There was a manliness about him that one never noticed before; his eyes wore a frank expression that was truly refreshing to see. He was clearly devoted to his wife, and they seemed to perfectly understand and trust each other. What could it mean?

Gradually I got to really like Faulkiner. He made a splendid host, was a pattern of the domestic virtues, and impressed one as being the soul of honor. Our acquaintance finally ripened into a close friendship, and the intimacy developed until at length I found myself—how I know not—on terms of real confidence with the man whom, only a few months before, I had been inclined to look upon very much in the light in which he was regarded by my cousin Sybil.

One evening he expounded the mystery.

"Shall I tell you the story of our courtship, Jack?" he asked.

"As you will, my dear fellow," I replied, "if it isn't too sacred a subject for a third party."

"That's just it—it is a sacred subject, as you will see."

He lit his cigar and proceeded:

"All that the world thought and said of me before I was married was true, and more than true. I was a 'regular bad lot.' And it is true also that in proposing to Miss Beaumont I was actuated by the most mercenary motives, and those alone.

"All that I wanted was her money—her money, Jack—do you hear me? The world said so, and the world was perfectly right. I had plans as to what I would do with it. My chief anxiety was to prevent her getting any inkling of the truth, and so I never ceased to dance constant attendance on her, and especially to withdraw her as far as possible from her lady friends. All went well until one evening at the Villiers' ball she took me to one side, saying:

"'Fritz'—she always called me Fritz rather than Frank—'I want to speak to you.'

"'What is it, darling?'

"'You are not to call me darling any more till this matter is cleared up.'

"'What matter, dear?'

"'Just this: People are saying that you are marrying me merely for my money. Is that so?'

"'Of course not. I love you for yourself—'

"'Stop, stop! I am going to put you to the proof. You know my solicitors—Messrs. Hopkins & Dicey, in Lincoln's Inn?'

"'Yes.'

"'Well, meet me there to-morrow at noon, sharp. And now, good-night.'

"WHAT LITTLE FOOL AND WHAT MAN?" I ASKED.

"In a moment she was gone. I passed a sleepless night, and with great difficulty nerved myself in the morning to keep the mysterious appointment.

"Old Dicey—I call him that because he is now one of my dearest friends—received me coldly.

"'I have been favored, Capt. Faulkiner,' he said, 'with some very extraordinary instructions from my client—your fiancee—Miss Beaumont. I must entirely disclaim all responsibility in the matter. I have simply given effect to Miss Beaumont's wishes, and the final issue of them must rest entirely with yourself. If you please, we will go to the adjoining room, where Miss Beaumont awaits us.'

"We found her seated near a window. She did not rise, but simply bowed, and I saw that her face was pale, and that it wore an expression of apparent enforced calm.

"'Fritz, I told you last night that people are saying that you are marrying me merely for my money. It matters little to me now whether they speak the truth or not. If they do, then, whether or not you become my husband, is the light gone out of my life indeed. You know, Fritz, how I love you! If you can have done this cruel thing nothing can undo it now. If you have designed to beggar me, under the pretext of affection, husband or no husband, fortune or no fortune, can make no difference to me. But it shall never be said that you actually did marry me for my money, and so, Fritz, I have asked Mr. Dicey to draw up a deed which—which——' And here the poor darling broke down completely and could say no more.

"I CLASPED HER IN MY ARMS AND WE WEPT TOGETHER."

"'The deed, Capt. Faulkiner,' said Mr. Dicey, with frigid solemnity, 'is an uncommon one; I know, indeed, of no precedent. But it relates that, in consideration of Capt. Francis Arthur Faulkiner, of the Second Life Guards, releasing Miss Honor Beaumont, of Hurtsfield House, Hertsfordshire, from her engagement to marry him, the said Miss Honor Beaumont herewith makes over to the said Capt. Francis Arthur Faulkiner all her real and personal property, as scheduled herewith, save and except the residence known as The Grove, Isleworth, in the county of Middlesex, and as much of her Midland Railway debenture stock as will suffice to provide an annuity of $1,500 a year.'

"I turned half mechanically to Honor. She was still calm and pale, but her eyes were brimful of tears.

"'It is impossible!' I exclaimed. And just at that moment something seemed to struggle within me, for out of the depths of my sinful heart there came welling the tiny, feeble remnant of the little good it ever held.

"I felt as if I could give not only love but life to that noble woman who had proposed to herself this mad, this fearful sacrifice in order to put to proof the sincerity of the man she loved. Disregarding the presence of the man of law, I clasped her in my arms, and we—yes, Jack, we wept together.

"I treasure now that sacred parchment which awakened to new life the little good that was left in me—which aroused the deadened sense of unselfish love and gave me riches greater far than my villainy had ever dreamed of. Do you wonder, Jack, that I am a changed man?"

And that was the sequel of the conversation in Bond street.

An Inch from Death.

A correspondent of the Detroit Free Press relates a peculiar experience which happened to a friend of his during a stay in Burma.

We were sitting on the veranda of our bungalow one evening, enjoying our after-dinner cheroot. Finally my friend arose and sauntered into his bedroom.

Usually lights were placed in all the bedrooms, but this evening, for some reason—probably the moonlight—the servant had not performed his duties. I could hear my friend fumbling about on his dressing-table, and then suddenly he gave a cry of horror and rushed out to the light.

"I have been struck by a snake," he gasped, and his face was deadly pale.

"Where is it? Quick! Show me!" I exclaimed, as I whipped out a knife.

He held out his right arm. There was no mark on the hand, which I examined critically, but on the cuff of the shirt were two tiny scratch-like punctures, and two little globules of poison sinking into the starched linen and leaving a sickly, greenish-yellow mark.

"You've had a close call, old man," I exclaimed, with a sigh of relief; "and now let us settle the snake."

We found him coiled up on a small mirror, which lay on the table, and an ugly-looking reptile he was, too, ready to strike again.

He was a very poisonous snake, known as the Deboae Russelli, but after my friend had done with him it would have been difficult for any naturalist to have placed him in his proper genus.

When a man concludes he is too smart to work, he comes to the conclusion that has made more thieves than any other one thing on earth.

AN IRISH "FAIRY BLAST."

How It Transmogrified a Servant Girl Into Her Dead Sister.

A strange case of superstition has been brought to light here. It is what may be called a local adaptation of the transmigration-of-souls idea, and goes under the local name of "fairy blast."

The symptoms of this "fairy blast" are that the person affected ceases for a time to be himself or herself, and becomes somebody else, very frequently a relative or friend. The following instance will hardly be believed, yet it was the experience of a lady living in George's street, Limerick, with a servant girl in her employment. One morning the mistress on encountering the servant, whose name was Mary, found her speech took the form of an unmistakable Yankee twang. Mary knew there was something the matter with her, and to account for it asked in the same strange accent:

"Didn't you hear of it, ma'am?"

"Hear what?" replied her astonished mistress.

"Didn't you hear," was the answer, "that I've got the 'fairy blast,' and I am not Mary now? I'm my sister Ellen."

This sister had been absent in America for some time, and the lady, while grasping the meaning of the altered speech, was considerably puzzled to know what had come over her slavey. The damsel, however, hastened to relieve her mistress' anxiety by the assurance, conveyed in perfect seriousness:

"I expect to be myself again in a few days, ma'am, but I'm Ellen now, and not Mary."

She kept her word, and just when the household had come to regard her as fit for a lunatic asylum she became herself again, remarking that the "blast" was over.—London (Ireland) correspondence New York Journal.

A JOYLESS JOKER IN LONDON.

American Complains That City Knocks Out His Frolicsome Humor.

An American in London asks a question:

"I wish you would tell me what is gone with the frolicsome humor I brought here from my native land. You are real white men in this city, but you are powerful sad, and that tells on the stranger till he feels he might as well be an owl. Out at Colorado Springs I was the most buoyant man in the country. Here I don't buoy worth a cent. My friends called me Laughing Willie. I've got no more laugh in me now than a mummy. The first stroke of business I did here I was so pleased with that I wanted to tell the other man the story of the tin-roofed cocktail. You should have seen his face. He said he didn't listen to stories in business hours. I went to a club, a regular palace, a magnificent hall, full of busts, and I said, 'I must tell somebody that story or I shall die.' There was an old gentleman on a settee, and I said, 'Have you ever heard the story of the tin-roofed cocktail?' He looked fierce. 'Am I right in supposing that a cocktail is a drink? 'You are, old man,' I said, 'you may bet every dollar on it.' And I had just started a real live laugh when he spoiled everything with, 'Then you mustn't talk about drinks in this hall.' Snakes and Injuns! How can I ever laugh again? I won't tell you the story of the tin-roofed cocktail, for yo'd never put it in. Certainly not. This column, like the hall of the Mausoleum, is no place for drinks."

But my correspondent's grievance is real enough. There is a kill-joy solemnity in our fine island decorum. We cannot even discuss holiday recreations without an awful sense of responsibility.—Illustrated London News.

Curious Oriental Customs.

There are many traits of character and custom in which the Arabs and Turks are our antipodes. They shave the head but not the chin, and we the reverse. With us the uncovering of the head in the presence of another is a mark of respect; with them a mark of disrespect. When they go into a place of worship they keep on the hat and take off the shoes and slippers; we do the opposite. They mount on the right side of a horse, and we on the left. They write from right to left, and we from left to right. We show our good breeding by taking the outside when we pass persons on the street; they by passing nearest to the wall. They do the honors of the table by serving themselves first; we serve ourselves last. If a friend inquires after your wife, you regard it as a compliment; to inquire after theirs is an insult. Their mourning dress is white, our black. They finish their wooden houses from the top downward, and we from the foundation up. The men wear frocks and the women pantaloons. We wash the hands by dipping them in water; they by having water poured upon them.

An Easy One.

A woman of fashion in a checked dress and a great dahlia-covered velvet hat, accompanied by a man in modish garments, was tripping along Fifth avenue. She was chatting with marked animation, and he was laughing flatteringly. The attention of the passers-by was attracted by the happy couple.

Behind the pair chanced to walk a lassie—the one yet living at home with mamma—and an older woman, a friend of mamma. The lassie spied the mondaine in checks and dahlia velvet on ahead and puckered her brow, saying: "Oh, I know that woman—have seen her often at Newport—she is dreadfully rich—now I remember, she is Mrs. Morris Blankly."

The friend of mamma was interested. She asked:

"And is the attentive man with Mrs. Blankly her husband?"

The lassie shrugged her shoulders and scorned the very idea.

"Ridiculous," she replied. "You dear, old-fashioned thing, don't you know that women's husbands never laugh in that good-natured way when they are with their wives."—New York Press.

Coppee's Love for Cats.

Francois Coppee, the French poet and dramatist, is a bachelor, and devoted to his pet cats. A friend who visited him a few years ago avers that he found one cat in the ante-chamber of the poet's residence, two cats in the dining-room, four in the drawing-room and eight in his study.

Christianity.—Christianity gives joy, temporal and eternal. Infidelity is hopeless.—Rev. A. C. Dixon, Baptist, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Gratitude.—We have three great reasons for gratitude—prosperity, national unity and successful war.—Rev. S. H. Cox, Congregationalist, Brooklyn, New York.

Creed.—A careful study shows the significant fact that the less of creed an organization has the less it flourishes.—Dr. B. F. De Costa, Episcopalian, New York City.

Duty of Christian People.—It should be the duty and privilege of all Christian people to help their fellow-men.—Rev. R. S. Dawson, Presbyterian, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Christian Life.—The Christian must speak as a Christian—breathe forth his faith as naturally and regularly as the breath of life. He ought to be a living epistle, seen and read of all men.—Rev. J. B. Nies, Episcopalian, Brooklyn, N. Y.

A Safeguard.—The Bible safeguards against sin and error. It is the great food and tonic for faith. It promotes as nothing else deep, abiding, overflowing joyfulness. It fits one for effective work.—Rev. R. A. Torrey, Presbyterian, Chicago, Ill.

Happiness.—True happiness does not "happen." It is governed by fixed laws: Peace with God. Submission to his will. God's promise to provide a blissful environment, hereafter if not in this life.—Rev. Mr. Taylor, Presbyterian, San Bernardino, Cal.

All Creation.—All creation partially but beautifuly reveals the truth that is in Christ. Thus are all things gathered up in Christ, both the things which are in heaven and the things which are on earth.—Dr. McElveen, Congregationalist, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Memory.—Memory plays too important a part in the education of the young. More stress should be placed upon observation, upon the power to describe what is seen, to reason from it and depict it accurately in words to others. Dr. Boynton, Congregationalist, Chicago, Ill.

Religion.—It is a good plan to formulate our religion, to put it into a creed, but religion is not its acceptance. It is reverence toward the Father, love toward the Savior, hatred toward sin and acceptance of forgiveness.—Rev. Dr. Abbott, Congregationalist, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Old Testament.—The one wonderful characteristic of the Old Testament is that God walked with man, talked with him and mapped out his ways. The incarnation of Christ was the culmination of God's purpose, which took place in the fullness of time. It was no accident, there are no accidents with God.—Rev. Dr. Patton, Presbyterian, Princeton, N. J.

Worship of God.—In this country there is not support coming from the Government to the church, but the Government imparts to us the great and glorious gift of being free; it enables us to worship God as our conscience dictates.—Archbishop Riordan, R. C., San Francisco, Cal.

Controlled by Law.—God, in creating man, so constituted him that he might be controlled by law. God provided the law by which that control is to be maintained. Therefore it behooves man to both know and obey that law.—Rev. C. C. Bowen, Swedenborgian, San Jose, Cal.

Evils in Society.—We find that there are evils in society, and it is impossible to make much headway against them. There are evils which may not be recited, but which cannot be credited until the social glass is driven from the home.—Rev. Geo. C. Lorimer, Methodist, Boston, Mass.

Greatness of God.—Men hardly speak of the grandness of God's works without some subduing sense of their majesty. How indecent, then, is it to take the name of God on the lip without some feeling of the vastness of him who is so much greater than all the things that he has made.—Rev. A. E. Myers, Collegiate, New York.

Striking a Balance.

The fact that so many great men are small of stature has often been commented upon by historians and newspaper writers. For some reason it is equally true that in the public mind greatness of achievement and intellectual superiority are frequently supposed to be fittingly embodied in a large frame. The diversity has often given rise to expressions of astonishment, but perhaps in no case in such an original way as at the state funeral of the late General ——, who was a man of insignificant physique.

"Is that all the size he was?" inquired a stranger of one of the officers who was taking part in the obsequies.

"Yes," replied the officer gravely; "what you see before you is all that was mortal of the great general."

The stranger looked earnestly at the calm face for a time, as if meditating on some of the dead man's great deeds; then he looked up at the officer he had been questioning, and exclaimed:

"Gracious! what a whooping percentage of him must have been immortal!"—Judge.

A Good Thing.

"Hello, Banks!" said his friend. "What are you doing here?"

"Oh, I'm in the insurance business."

"Fire or life?"

"Neither," said Banks calmly, and as he did not brace himself to prove it, nor make a lunge at the other man's buttonhole, his friend's curiosity was aroused.

"Hm! What kind of a species have you added to the genus?" he inquired humbly.

"Well," said Banks, with the gravity of a man who has just given his last quarter to a philanthropist, "it isn't the bright side of an old thing turned over. It is something distinctly new. A good thing? Hm! It doesn't even need to be pushed along!"

"Well," said his friend, "you don't happen to have a picture of it in your pocket?"

"No," said Banks. "But I'll tell you. It is a policy that positively insures against the meeting of creditors when you are broke; against the man who wants to borrow your umbrella for five minutes; against the candid friend who tells you how much worse you look than you feel; against the man who wants to get a corner on your time without paying for it; against the shark, the fish story, the chestnut, against the mother-in-law, and other little annoyances of home; against the man who knows it all; against"—

"Hold on, there!" broke in his friend wildly. "That'll do. Make me out a policy for $50,000." — Detroit Free Press.

Black Sea Water Is Poison.

The explorations of the Russian scientist Andrussow have established a very curious fact. The Black sea, which in some parts has a depth of more than 6,500 feet, is poisoned by sulphureted hydrogen wherever the water is deeper than 1,200 feet. This accounts for the curious fact that there is no organic life below that depth, excepting perhaps some bacteria of very low order, impregnated with sulphur. The causes for this phenomenon are explained by the quick outflow of the fresh water through the Bosporous, while salt water coming from the Mediterranean enters through a deeper current into the depths of the Black sea.

The waters on the surface are, therefore, controlled absolutely by horizontal currents of considerable force, and vertical currents which might carry the noxious gases from the bottom to the surface and fresh oxygen from the surface to the bottom are hardly ever noticeable. The water at great depths is now so saturated with sulphuric gas by the disintegration of organic matter sinking to the bottom by reason of its weight that no fish or other living being which needs oxygen for its organic system can exist beyond a stated depth.—Philadelphia Record.

The "Letter Gae."

The leader of psalmody, or precentor, in the church of Scotland used to read from his desk in front of the pulpit the successive lines for congregational singing. He was the "letter gae"—i. e., he that let go or started the praise—and his desk was called the "letteron" (lectrinum). Pitching his voice to the first note of each line, he proceeded to chant the words in a slow, drawling monotone, prolonging the last syllable for a little and then breaking at the head of the congregation into the music set to the words thus delivered. The effect of this would no doubt be frequently more curious and entertaining than edifying and solemn, and strange developments must occasionally have occurred. The position tested not only the musical qualifications, but also the literary attainments of the leader, and there are passages in the metrical version of the Psalms as used in Scotland which must have put rural precentors on their mettle.—Notes and Queries.

Faith In the Doctor.

An exchange quotes a story said to have been told at a "charity dinner."

A man was brought into the accident hospital who was thought to be dead. His wife was with him. One of the doctors said, "He is dead;" the man raised his head and said, "No, I'm not dead yet," whereupon his wife admonished him, saying, "Be quiet; the doctor ought to know best."

Impudent Schoolboys.

Some years ago, at Winchester, a notice was put up that "Mr. So-and-so (one of the masters) will give a lecture on 'Our Eyes and How We See Through Them.'" Underneath this some boy wrote, "Or our pupils and how they see through us."—London Chronicle.

The Thing to Do.

When the Sciatic nerve gives its worst torment in the shape of Sciatica, the one thing to do is to use St. Jacobs Oil promptly and feel sure of a cure.

The man who is completely wrapped up in himself is always cold.

No household is complete without a bottle of the famous Jesse Moore Whiskey. It is a pure and wholesome stimulant recommended by all physicians. Don't neglect this necessity.

The grip is bad enough, but the man with the sure cure for it is worse.

Railroad Methods.

The motive power department of a railway keeps an accurate double entry account with every locomotive and every car, so that the manager or master mechanic can tell in an instant how much it has cost to maintain and repair it, how many miles it has traveled and how many cars or tons it has hauled. A similar account is kept with every freight and passenger car. The Pullman company, for example, can tell you any morning the exact earnings of every sleeper or parlor car in service, how much each cost originally and how much has been expended in equipment, maintenance and repairs. — Chicago Record.

CONSULTING A WOMAN.

Mrs. Pinkham's Advice Inspires Confidence and Hope.

Examination by a male physician is a hard trial to a delicately organized woman.

She puts it off as long as she dare, and is only driven to it by fear of cancer, polypus, or some dreadful ill.

Most frequently such a woman leaves a physician's office where she has undergone a critical examination with an impression, more or less, of discouragement.

This condition of the mind destroys the effect of advice; and she grows worse rather than better. In consulting Mrs. Pinkham no hesitation need be felt, the story is told to a woman and is wholly confidential. Mrs. Pinkham's address is Lynn, Mass., she offers sick women her advice without charge.

Her intimate knowledge of women's troubles makes her letter of advice a wellspring of hope, and her wide experience and skill point the way to health.

"I suffered with ovarian trouble for seven years, and no doctor knew what was the matter with me. I had spells which would last for two days or more. I thought I would try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I have taken seven bottles of it, and am entirely cured."—MRS JOHN FOREMAN, 26 N Woodberry Ave., Baltimore, Md.

Fair are the flowers and the children, but their subtle suggestion is fairer;
Rare is the rose-burst of dawn, but the secret that clasps it is rarer;
Sweet the exultance of song, but the strain that precedes it is sweeter,
And never was poem yet writ, but the meaning outmastered the meter.

Never a daisy that grows but a mystery
guideth the growing;
Never a river that flows, but a majesty
scepters the flowing;
Never a Shakspeare that soared, but a stronger than he did enfold him,
Nor ever a prophet foretells, but a mightier seer hath foretold him.

Back of the canvas that throbs the painter is hinted and hidden;
Into the statue that breathes the soul of the sculptor is bidden;
Under the joy that is felt lie the infinite issues of feeling;
Crowning the glory revealed is the glory that crowns the revealing.

Great are the symbols of being, but that which is symbolled is greater;
Vast the create and beheld, but vaster the inward creator;
Back of the sound broods the silence,
back of the gift stands the giving;
Back of the hand that receives thrill the sensitive nerves of receiving.

Space is as nothing to spirit, the deed is outdone by the doing;
The heart of the wooer is warm, but warmer the heart of the wooing;
And up from the pit where these shiver, and up from the heights where those shine,
Twin voices and shadows swim starward, and the essence of life is divine.

A GAME OF BLUFF.

"A RAG and a bone and a hank of hair,'" cynically quoted Marion. The next moment he repented his words, when he noted the hurt look, accompanied by the flash of resentment, in Warren's eyes.

Marion meant to be sympathetic, after the manner of men, by uttering philosophical platitudes as a balm for sentimental heart troubles, but he quickly realized that the case before him was too genuine and severe to be cured by such superficial ointment as quotations from cynical Kipling. So he took another tack.

"Of course, old man, there are women and women. Some can be had for the asking, while others play for all the line they can get. It's just like fishing"—his metaphor suggesting an illustration from out his sporting proclivities—"a hornpout will bite at almost anything, but a gamy trout insists on a nice fly for an attraction, and even after you've got one really hooked you've got to play it until your patience is almost gone. Now, you'd rather have a girl with some spirit, one who'd stand you off for a time, than one who was all the time throwing herself at your head, wouldn't you?"

Warren vouchsafed a weak, doubtful "Yes."

"By the way, have you asked her?"

"No. That's the difficulty. I don't really get a chance. Just as I get myself spurred up to the mark some confounded interruption interferes, or she switches me off on a sidetrack with some remark or other."

"You think the girl really cares for you?" asked Marion, dropping his raillery and becoming serious.

"I think she does," frankly answered Warren, "although sometimes I feel as if I didn't know whether she did or not," he continued, somewhat dubiously.

"Well, there's only one way to find out," remarked Marion, "and that is to—say, I have a plan," breaking abruptly into his sentence. "I have a plan," he slowly repeated, "and I believe it will work if you follow my advice. Put yourself in my hands," he continued, his face brightening as his plan was unfolded to his mind, "and I'll bet dollars to doughnuts that you'll win out." Then he buttonholed Warren, pulled him into a corner, and addressed him in a low, earnest tone, interspersing his remarks with emphatic gestures. When he had finished Warren still looked dubious, but somewhat more hopeful.

* * * * * * * *

"Oh, good evening, Mr. Warren. I'm so glad to see you. We're just packing up, getting ready to go to the mountains."

"Indeed! Lovely weather. Hope you'll have a pleasant time." But he might have been a phonograph, or a Punch-and-Judy operator, for all the expression he put into his words.

"Oh, I've no doubt we will," she answered, with a toss of her head. "There's so much going on there all the time, and so many interesting people to meet," she continued, with a bored air, as if her immediate surroundings were productive of nothing but ennui.

"Yes," he assented, in a listless monotone, which might mean anything or nothing.

She pretended not to notice his abstracted manner, and rattled on.

"My friends write me there are ever so many nice people there, and with golf and driving and dancing there'll be no end of fun."

"Yes."

Again that tone of polite indifference.

"Well, I'm going for a trip myself," he added, rousing himself from his lethargy, and almost blurting out his remark.

"Indeed! Where?"

This was her turn, and she countered forcibly in the matter of polite indifference.

"To Hongkong."

"To Hongkong?"

This time she was interested, in spite of herself. She repeated his remark, with distinct emphasis on the words, and a rising inflection on the end of each. "Oh, come, now, you're joking. You're——"

"No, really," he asserted; "there's an opening there in our house. They want a young man to take charge of their branch banking-house there, and I can have the place. It looks like a good opening, and I thought I'd take it. Of course, it means"—clearing his throat—"tearing one's self away from one's friends, but then, I probably will not be greatly missed."

"Oh, Mr. Warren," broke in the girl, reproachfully.

The coquettish manner was gone. The genuine woman was speaking.

"Well, for a day or two a few may remark my absence, and then——"

He finished the sentence with a careless wave of his hand, to denote the ephemeral nature of the friendship he conceived was felt for him.

"But there are no nice girls there," she remarked, mischievously.

She was trying to get back to the coquette again. But her eyes were moist.

"That isn't a consideration," he answered, gloomily. "There's only one girl in this world for whose smile I'd give the hopes I entertain for my business future, and I'm afraid that in her eyes I'm but as all the rest of the world."

"Who is the young lady, may I ask; do I know her?" she queried, with an attempt at gayety. Warren glanced at her, but she wasn't looking at him. She seemed to be manifesting an extraordinary interest in picking at the end of a ribbon on her dress.

* * * * * * * *

"I've just been reading the Social Gossip," wrote Marion, who had gone West for a month on a business trip, "and I congratulate you. But why in the name of all that's absurd did you hesitate to call for a show of hands, when you held a flush? One of these fine days you will want a crest. How would this suggestion meet your approval: 'A bold bluff painted on a field of blue?'"

And he underscored two words in the last sentence.—Boston Herald.

No bird can fly backward without turning. The dragon fly, however, can accomplish this feat and outstrip any swallow.

Oysters, after they have been brought away from the sea, know by instinct the exact hour when the tide is rising and approaching their beds and so, of their own accord, open their shells to receive their food from the sea, as if they were still at home.

The tongues of the cat family are covered with recurving spines. In the common domestic cat these are small, but sufficiently well developed to give the tongue a feeling of roughness. But in the lion and tiger the spines are strong enough to enable the animal to tear away the skin of a man's hand merely by licking it.

There are several species of fish, reptiles and insects which never sleep during their stay in this world. Among fish it is now positively known that pike, salmon and goldfish never sleep at all. Also that there are several others of the fish family that never sleep more than a few minutes during a month. There are dozens of species of flies which never indulge in slumber and from three to five species of serpents which the naturalists have never yet been able to catch napping.

Tagged and Forwarded.

"In charge of the conductor," children often travel on the cars, but on a recent trip the Cunard steamship Campania carried ten boys and girls who were taking long journeys alone.

A girl of 14 was going to her aunt in Chicago; another, aged 11, to her stepfather in North Dakota. A boy of 10 and a girl of 9 were consigned to two small towns in Massachusetts. A 9-year-old boy was going to his aunt in Chicago; an 11-year-old girl to her sister in Boston, and four children, ranging in age from 5 to 11, were seeking their father in Calumet, Mich.

It was the largest party of unattended children that ever landed at New York. All were "tagged" with directions, asking those with whom they came in contact to see that they were sent on their way.

Counting the ocean voyage and the long land journeys, several of these little travelers covered more than 5,000 miles—alone, except for the thoughtful and kindly persons who may have noticed and helped them.

The Power of His Eye.

It has been told of Van Amburgh, the great lion tamer, that on one occasion when in a bar-room he was asked how he gained his wonderful power over animals. He said:

"It is by showing them that I am not in the least afraid of them, and by keeping my eye steadily on theirs. I'll give you an example of the power of my eye."

"You see that fellow? He's a regular clown. I'l make him come across the room to me, and I won't say one word to him."

Sitting down, he fixed his keen, steady eye on the man. Presently the fellow straightened himself up, rose from his seat and came slowly across to the lion tamer. When he was close enough he drew back his arm and struck Van Amburgh a tremendous blow over the chin, knocking him clean over the chair, with the remark: "You'll stare at me like that again, won't you!"

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS

THIS IS THEIR DEPARTMENT OF THE PAPER.

Quaint Sayings and Cute Doings of the Little Folks Everywhere, Gathered and Printed Here for All Other Little Ones to Read.

You who keep a tabby cat as an ornament and as a plaything, have no idea of the immense assistance which the government finds the tabby cat in caring for the government's stores.

A few years ago everything in the government storehouses was destroyed by rats and mice, and it looked as though not even the steel shells would be secure from their ravages. A gentleman who had a useful cat at home suggested that the storehouses be supplied with a corporal's guard of cats, to protect the government's goods.

His suggestion was adopted, and now the army storehouses of the United States are officially supplied with cats to protect the property.

The storehouses of the United States Army Building of New York have four handsome cats, which were recently christened with Spanish names. The chief of the guard is Queen Isabella. She is a splendid mouser and an admirable mother. At present she has six children, but as yet the government has not appointed them to the army storehouse positions, and it is probable that Her Majesty's offspring will be dropped into a pail of water in a few days.

Queen Isabella's assistants are Weyler and Blanco. Weyler is 15 years old and has a fierce growth of whiskers.

APPOINTED BY THE GOVERNMENT.

He is the fighter of the storehouse and stands outside to prevent strangers from entering.

Of the four cats, for Uncle Sam appoints only four to the New York storehouses, the youngest is Alphonso, a maltese kitten. Alphonso was recently run over by a truck, but except for a pronounced limp he is in as good shape as ever.

When the cats were first placed in the important post of guarding the storehouses they were compelled to forage for themselves. Sometimes the keeper brought them a little food and a friendly milkman supplied the milk; but the cats got thin and cross. They wanted their food regularly, so the government acted upon the subject and an annual appropriation of $18 was set aside for the maintenance of each tabby.

Blanco is a peaceful old maltese, with gentle manners, but at the sight of a rat he becomes warlike and bristling. Little Alphonso has caught only one mouse since his appointment to the storehouse, but this, his friends think, is doing very well, considering his accident.

Can You Answer Them?

Here is a list of questions for the wideawakes. Can you answer them?

You can any day see a white horse, why can you never see a white colt?

How many kinds of trees grow in your neighborhood and what are they good for?

Why does a horse eat grass backward and a cow eat it forward?

Why does a hop vine wind one way and a bean vine another?

Where should the inside of a chimney be bigger—at top or bottom, and why?

Can you tell why a horse tethered with a rope always unravels it, while a cow twists it?

Why do the leaves turn upside down just before a rain?

What animals have no front teeth, and why?—Exchange.

The Dangers of Contagion.

It is one of the school laws in Boston, as in other cities, that no pupil may come from a family any member of which is ill with a contagious disease. One day recently Willie K—— appeared before his teacher and said: "My sister's got the measles, sir." "Well, what are you doing here, then?" replied the teacher severely. "Don't you know any better than to come to school when your sister has the measles? Now you go home, and stay there until she is well." The boy, who is a veritable little rogue, went to the door, where he turned with a twinkle in his eye and said: "If you please, sir, my sister lives in Philadelphia."

"Can't God Count?"

Two children were carrying a basket of cakes to their grandmother. As often happens with children—and with grown people, too—they were curious to know what was in the basket, and so they carefully raised the corner and looked in. When their greedy eyes saw the tempting cake, their mouths fairly watered to take them. After counting them over several times they almost made up their minds to eat just one of them. Nobody would know it, and it would taste so good!

While they were gazing at the cakes and just ready to take one, the little girl looked up into her brother's face and thoughtfully asked the matter-of-fact question, "Can't God count?"

This settled the matter immediately, and all the cakes were carried to their grandmother.—Ram's Horn.

Doing the Next Best Thing.

In a car a small boy was observed to be suddenly agitated, but regained his self-control after a few moments. Son after the conductor appeared and asked for fares. When he stood before the small boy there was a slight pause, and the passengers were surprised to hear the following: "Pleathe charge it to my papa; I've thwallowed the money."

A Matter of Choice.

Mother—To think that my little Ethel should have spoken so impertinently to papa to-day at dinner! She never hears me talk in that way to him. Ethel (stoutly)—Well, but you choosed him, and I didn't.

Catering to His Taste.

"Did you divide your bonbons with your little brother, Mollie?" "Yes, ma. I ate the candy and gave him the mottoes. You know he is awfully fond of reading."

THE ENSIGN'S EMBARRASSMENT

An Apparently Simple Order Mixed Him Up Badly.

Clothing the immature in a little brief authority and responsibility is frequently attended with results the reverse of impressive, as in the case of one of Uncle Sam's youthful naval officers, concerning whom the Boston Globe furnishes the following:

While the Philadelphia was lying at the Brooklyn navy yard a young ensign was placed in command of the deck. It happened that only one item remained on the list of the morning's duties, and that was to sweep decks at seven bells.

It was not a very martial command to give, but as the time approached, the officer of the deck waxed nervous. He imagined that the eyes of all hands were on him, and that the safety of the ship depended upon his giving the order in the proper voice. At three minutes of seven bells he again scanned the order book. It read, "Seven bells: Pipe sweepers."

It was plain enough, and the young officer took his stand near the mainmast, and called out in a very weak voice, "Bo's'n's mate!"

The man addressed sprang to his feet with finger touching cap. "Ay, ay, sir," he replied.

Glancing hastily around, the scared officer muttered hoarsely, "Swipe peepers!"

It was an entirely new order to the boatswain's mate. He touched his cap inquiringly. The ensign, more confused than ever, stammered desperately:

"Peep swipers, my man."

The words were overheard, and the laugh which followed proved the last straw. The ensign drew himself up, and with withering scorn exclaimed:

"Sweep pipers, and be quick about it, too!"

This time his order was obeyed, the grinning boatswain's mate having fathomed his meaning.

LASSOED.

A Thief Is Neatly Caught by His Intended Victim.

Robert Crawford, in describing certain experiences among the outlaws and desperadoes of South America, tells one story so original that its central incident might serve as motive for a fictitious sketch.

One night a farmer was roused from sleep by hearing unusual and stealthy noises about the place. He got quietly out of bed, and after listening attentively, discovered that some people outside were cutting a hole through the door, close to the bolt, by which it was held.

It did not require any great amount of detective talent to guess the object of the operation, and the best way to foil it was suggested by a thong of rawhide with a loop on it, which hung from a hook on the inside of the door. Noiselessly removing the thong, he slipped the end of it through the loop, and there he stood, armed with an impromptu lasso, ready for action.

It was an anxious time while the farmer stood watching the hole in the door grow larger and larger, until, at last, it was of sufficient size to effect the purpose for which it was made.

The supreme moment arrived, and a hand was stealthily inserted, not only through the hole, but also through the loop of the little lasso which hung skillfully around it. With a sudden jerk, the loop was tightened round the wrist, and the hand dragged in as far as the aperture would allow, while the thong was securely fastened to the hook on the back of the door.

The robber was perfectly helpless. His companions came to his aid, and having ineffectually dragged at the imprisoned arm till they were tired, gave up the struggle, and prepared to depart.

But they were prudent men, and it occurred to them that, to save himself, their comrade might betray them. Dead men, they thought, tell no tales; so they killed him, and then ran away.

A Thoughtful Man.

Mrs. Green—My husband is such a thoughtful man! He always goes down into the basement kitchen to smoke.

Mrs. Gray—And lets the smoke come upstairs into the dining-room through the dumb waiter.

Mrs. Greene—Yes, but that's because he is absent-minded, poor man. That has nothing to do with his thoughtfulness, you know.—Boston Transcript.

Milton and Homer were both blind. This is conclusive evidence that out of sight isn't always out of mind.

THE MAKING OF A SHOE.

Inventive Genius Has Made Wonderful Improvements in the Operation.

It is a far cry from the cobbler of fifty years ago, sitting on his little bench pegging away at the pair of shoes for his neighbor, which must be done on the morrow, to the modern methods and machines for shoe manufacture. Notwithstanding the fact that science has made tremendous advances and invention has done mighty things in almost every branch of industrial life, somehow or other, most people still keep in their minds the vision of the shoemaker of old, bending over his task and patiently boring and stitching, now and then stopping to wax over his thread. But far different is it now. Machines, with the most astonishing accomplishments, pound and hammer and stitch in place of the human hands which lent themselves to this work in the former time. And yet it seems to one watching the processes, as if human hands were somewhere concealed in these cases of iron, so deft and wonderful are the parts. Fancy a machine which can cut and sew 3,500 button holes a day and then revolve in your mind the long and weary toiling of the tired fingers which might have the same amount of work to do. In some cases a pair of shoes goes through 139 distinct processes in the course of its manufacture. A pair of shoes has been turned out in twenty-eight minutes, but that is exceptional, and the manufacturers like better to take time for the goods to rest a bit after some of the processes. A trip by a Free Press was made through one of Detroit's big factories the other day, and some interesting things were noted. The factory has a capacity of 4,000 pairs a day, although this limit has never been reached, and 3,000 a day, or six pairs a minute, is keeping the hands pretty busy.

The hides and skins come in with ragged edges, some with holes here and there, others with unbroken surfaces. It is necessary in some way to get at the quantity of leather in these pieces, a puzzling job. But brains have solved the problem, and there stands a machine for doing the entire work. The skin is put into the machine as into a planer and the number of square feet and inches in its surface is indicated on a dial. The amount of labor saved on account of the irregular edges of the leather can be imagined.

Making the Patterns.

It seems as if the theoretical side of the manufacture of a pair of shoes should begin with the making of the patterns, at which one to five men are kept constantly working. These are cut out of stiff pasteboard, and are smoothly edged with tin. Each part of the shoe must have its pattern. Some of these seem to have very little resemblance to anything an ordinary observer might see in a pair of shoes. For instance, the pattern for the upper looks like a large horse-shoe magnet in shape. With these patterns in hand, the real manufacturer of the shoe is about to begin. From skins of the proper kind and patterns of the proper shape the cutters start the work. Laying the patterns down on the skins they quickly cut the skins the shape of the outlines of the patterns, their knives being razor-edged. The cutters, as well as all the other workers throughout the factory, are guided in their labors by a system of cards issued from the office. When an order comes into the house one of these cards is made out for each kind of shoe wanted, showing the number, kind, the size, the last, the finish, and so on, giving every detail about the shoe which is to be turned out. This card follows that lot of shoes wherever it goes in its wanderings through the factory. So that the cutter knows just what patterns they are to use. When all the necessary parts of the upper portion of the shoe have been cut, including the linings and the fancy tips and tidbits, the lot is sent on to the bottoming department. Here are cut the heels, in-soles and out-soles and various other strange operations are gone through with. The heels and soles are cut by hand with dies. Before each worker is an immense section of a tree trunk, on the top of which the hide is laid. The sharp edged die is placed on the hide and the worker with a fell swoop of his hammer throws out what is to be ere long the sole or the heel of a shoe. The process is exactly like that which mother used in making cookies, with the addition of the extra strength necessary. In an ordinary heel there are six pieces instead of the one which is apparent to the person who examines a finished pair of shoes. These pieces are put together in a machine, nail holes are bored and enough nails are put in to hold the heel together, all with a single motion of the machine. Another machines cut the rough piece which has been hewn out of the sole into the exact shape and size needed for the shoe desired. This is done by a pattern of the sole in question governing the cutter of the machine. Another machine cuts what is known as a "channel" in the top of the in-sole and around the edge and it is this channel to which the upper is to be sewed. Other machines cut out the pieces of the sole between the heel and the ball of the foot.

Wonderful Machines.

In the next department most of the lighter sewing is done, as well as the pasting together of the linings and the uppers. Scores of girls are busy at the sewing machines, fastening the different parts of the upper together. Here, too, are the button-hole machines which do their work with lightning rapidity. Another sort of machine, with a din and hubbub, cuts the holes for the eyelets and the hooks of laced shoes, and stamps them in securely with marvelous quickness, and the sound of a Gatling gun. Still another sort sews on the buttons, fastening the buttons on as many as 1,600 pairs a day. Beside these is the newest invention, a machine for riveting the buttons on. Seventy-five pairs an hour can be finished on this machine.

Thus, far, the uppers and the heels and soles have been making their way separately through the processes, but they are soon to come together. And now the "last" is to come into play. This is put inside the upper, with the in-sole; the edges of the upper are turned over the edges and tacked down on the sole. Then the out-sole is tacked on by machinery with a few nails, the noise resembling the report of musketry in the distance. Each of the nails in this machine as well as in all the others is made from wire as it is needed, the nails being made and driven at the same instant. But there are still more wonderful machines to be seen. Here, for instance, is one which sews the in-sole onto the upper. This is the welt machine and does 400 pairs a day, whereas a man's work was formerly twelve pairs. Not less wonderful is the stitching machine which punctures the heavy out-soles and sews them at the same time to the upper and in-sole, tying a knot in the most human fashion at every stitch. The awl which makes the punctures, and the needle which does the sewing are curved, and together form almost a semi-circle, the hole being made with one stroke and the thread inserted with the next. The heel is still to be fastened to the sole, and this is done by a ponderous looking machine which drives all the nails in at one time.

Other Processes.

There are still dozens of processes to be gone through—the trimming down of the heels, which is done by a machine driving a curved cutter, trimming the edges of the sole, sand-papering the heels and soles, burnishing and coloring the edges, and so on. No detailed description of the processes could be attempted. Suffice it to say that the workings of iron and steel in a shoe factory would astonish the wisest man who has not seen them every day. Improvements are constantly being made and machines which last week were considered marvels are next week thrown out for old iron, as useless in comparison with the new invention. A Detroit man has just invented a jointed last which is said to excel anything else for the ease with which it can be inserted and taken out of a shoe. When once inside the shoe, it can be straightened out and thus made much larger than before. Throughout the many processes, men's and women's shoes are kept separate and different workers make them, so that in one respect shoemakers are not unlike the Quakers. Of course there is an inspector who looks over the finished product thoroughly and throws out any that may be imperfect. Then there is a complete box factory where paste-board shoe-boxes are turned out in large quantities.

COALING STATION FOR THE UNITED STATES IN THE FAR EAST.

PAGO-PAGO HARBOR, SAMOA, WHERE THE GOVERNMENT WILL BUILD A COALING STATION.

A soft answer turneth away divorce.

A woman's logic is far above a man's morals.

With most women belief is better than proof.

The longest way home is the shortest way to trouble.

A husband doesn't know a good thing when he hasn't got it.

Husbands are necessary only once a month—when the bills come in.

It makes a woman shudder to think how happy she could have made you.

The devil shows you the worst side first. The rest makes it seem better.

If women's good intentions were jewels they wouldn't wear anything else.

Love is divided into quarters—one-quarter vanity, three-quarters jealousy.

Eve wanted to put on clothes merely to be able to have a hat to go with them.

When a woman is convicted she acquits herself by saying she has been misjudged.

Goodness wouldn't seem half so uninteresting to women if it didn't wear such plain clothes.

When a woman likes a man her idea of having him happy is not having him belong to some other woman.

Every married woman would like to see you happy with some other woman, and they'd scratch out her eyes if you were.

Any woman who thinks about it will admit that Adam deserved to fall because he did not increase Eve's allowance for pin money.

Young Shafter's Lesson.

The Cleveland Leader gives the recipe by which General Shafter learned self-reliance, saying that the story is told in the officer's own words.

Once, when I was a boy at school, our teacher called up the class in mental arithmetic, and began putting questions, beginning with the pupil at the head. I stood somewhere near the middle, and next below me was a boy who was three years older, and considerably ahead of me in our various studies.

"How many are thirteen and nine and eight?" asked the teacher.

One after another the boys and girls guessed and failed; meantime I thought it out. The question had just got to me, when I heard the big boy, who stood next, whispering, apparently to himself:

"Twenty-nine, twenty-nine, twenty-nine."

"Well, Willie," said the teacher, "let us see if you know. Come, now, be prompt." I cocked my head on one side, and said, triumphantly, "Twenty-nine!"

"Next! How many are thirteen and nine and eight?"

"Thirty," said the big boy below.

That was just what I had figured it to be, myself; and I made up my mind, then and there, to depend on my own judgment for the future. Ever since when I have had anything to do, and have figured out what I thought to be the best way of doing it, I have gone ahead, remembering, when people criticised, or tried to throw me off the track, how that big boy made a fool of me in the mental arithmetic class.

Aptly Criticised.

One of the best criticisms of Scott's novels was given by an Irish cobbler, as related in the biography of "William Stokes."

Doctor Stokes had often loaned the cobbler odd volumes of Scott to read. Walking beside him one day on the road, the doctor said:

"Well, Denny, what did you think of the last book I lent you?"

"It's a great book, intirely, docther, an' Sir Walter Scott's a thrue historian."

"I'm inclined to agree with you," replied Doctor Stokes. "But what do you mean exactly by calling him a true historian?"

"I mane, your honor, he's a thrue historian because he makes you love your kind."

It would be easier to forgive a fool if he were original; but all are fools in the same old ways.

BUSY SCENES IN A MODERN SHOE MANUFACTORY.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.,

FRIDAY, MARCH 10.....1899

The bill creating the grade of Admiral having passed both Houses of Congress and been signed by the President, and the latter having named Rear Admiral George Dewey for the position, the hero has nothing more to look forward to in this earthly sphere. He now occupies a rank as high as any other naval commander in the world. He not only outranks all the officers of the United States navy, but he is a great deal higher than any officer in the army. If Congress were to create again the grade of General, and if the President were to name a man for that place, Dewey and the General would be on an equal footing. The highest grade in the army is Major General, and it corresponds with Rear Admiral in the navy. Especial distinction attaches to Dewey's elevation, because he has not reached it through the slow and tedious process of promotion by rule of law. Congress has given him a vote of confidence and has passed a special act for the purpose of conferring upon him a commission unknown to the regulations of the Navy Department. He will now be entitled to run up on the Olympia a blue flag containing four white stars—an emblem which has not been seen upon an American warship since the death of Admiral Porter. Of course there is a higher office to which Dewey might aspire in this country, but he has already declared that he is unfit to hold it, and that under no circumstances will he accept it. We refer to the Presidency of the United States. In his business, however, he has reached the highest pinnacle possible, and not only will he continue to hold it until the day of his death, but it gives him a place in history second to that only held by Paul Jones, Commodore Perry, Admiral Farragut and some other Americans who have brought lustre upon the navy of their country. The position occupied by Dewey is marvelous also for another reason; he achieved his distinction in a single day by performing an act which for enterprise and daring is almost unequaled. Perhaps other men similarly situated might have also distinguished themselves, but they had not the opportunity and Dewey had. Prior to the battle of Manila there were probably not a thousand persons in the United States outside of the navy who were aware that such a man as George Dewey existed. Now his name is a household word, and he is at once the most most illustrious of Americans.

The new army bill, it is said by War Department officials, will deprive Governors of States of the privileges of selecting officers for volunteer regiments to be recruited in the future. It is pointed out that such troops will volunteer as United States soldiers and not as State volunteers. The news will not be disappointing to those persons who have the good of the service at heart. Many States during the late war provided manifestly incompetent officers for their troops because of the operation of this law.

The rain-making crank is again in evidence in various parts of the country. One in Montana proposes to deluge the earth by means of electricity; another in Los Angeles, Cal., proposes a general bombardment of the heavens from baloons sent up from Mt. Lowe. The first essential in rain making is to supply the atmosphere with sufficient moisture to produce the desired precipitation, and if noise will bring about this desired humidity, it would be a good plan to let the Los Angeles man try his experiment at his own expense, as suggested by himself.

When a government holds territory, denying the inhabitants thereof any voice or participation in the conduct of its affairs, the conditions there presented constitute imperialism. The territory is treated as a mere dependency, and the inhabitants are subjects of the home government. The natives are denied the usual privileges of citizenship. They have no courts of their own, and the law is administered by a military tribunal of judges who are appointed by the governing power.

The reduest on the part of Admiral Dewey that the Oregon be sent to Manila at once for "political reasons," has caused the public to believe that there is a probability of war with Germany. If we are compelled to fight Germany, as well as with Aguinaldo and his followers, and then pay Spain $20,000,000 for the chance, it can be truthfully said we are "spoiling for a fight."

The Captain and crew of a Spanish schooner in Havana harbor, who raised a twenty-foot Spanish flag as a mark of disrespect to an American auxiliary cruiser, not only lost their flag but were compelled to raise a Cuban flag and give three cheers for it and Old Glory. It was expensive fun for the Dons.

Speaker Reed seems to have gotten a little mixed as to his identity. As we understand it, he is Speaker of the House of Representatives, not President of the United States, both Houses of Congress at once and all the people.

Chicago people will doubtless feel relieved to learn that Butcher Becker simply threw his wife into Lake Michigan. Some fears were entertained that Mr. Becker had adopted the Luetgart plan of making sausages.

"Expansion" and "Imperialism" will be inexhaustible topics during the next presidential campaign.

HOME MIXED FERTILIZER.

Items From the Ohio Station About Fertilizing Materials and Their Cost.

For several years the Ohio station has been using a mixture of equal parts of tankage and acid phosphate, with a small addition of muriate of potash (200 pounds to the ton), with most satisfactory results, but in order to make a more direct comparison of this mixture with factory mixtures the station began a year ago a comparative experiment in which four brands of factory mixed fertilizers, bought direct from four of the oldest fertilizer manufacturing firms in the state, are being used side by side with four home mixtures, made from the materials named, in such a way as to give approximately equal percentages of ammonia, total and available phosphoric acid and potash in the home mixtures to those claimed in the factory mixed brands.

The general outcome of this test to date is that home mixtures of similar chemical composition, made from the materials named, have given an equal increase of crop when used on corn with standard brands of factory mixed fertilizers, and at a reduction of more than 40 per cent in cost.

Acid phosphate is the basis of the phosphoric acid in practically all factory mixed fertilizers. It is a fossil bone, found in South Carolina, Florida and Tennessee, which is ground to a fine powder and mixed with sulphuric acid in order to make its phosphoric acid more easily soluble. The northern markets are supplied chiefly from Baltimore, where it may be bought at prices ranging from $10 per ton for single sack lots down to $7.50 per ton in carloads in bulk for a grade analyzing 14 per cent soluble phosphoric acid. In the experiments made at the Ohio experiment station a pound of available phosphoric acid in acid phosphate has apparently been as effective as a pound of phosphoric acid in bone.

Tankage is made at all the great slaughter houses. It contains both phosphoric acid and ammonia and is variable in quality. Different grades are classed as 6 and 35, 7 and 30, 8 and 20, 9 and 20, etc., meaning that they contain 6 per cent ammonia and 35 per cent bone phosphate or 7 per cent ammonia and 30 per cent bone phosphate, etc., the term bone phosphate meaning that combination of phosphoric acid and lime which is found in bone and of which about 46 per cent is phosphoric acid. The lower grades shade off below into raw bone, which might be called a 5 and 50 tankage, and above into dried blood, which contains 10 to 14 per cent ammonia with 2 or 3 per cent or only a trace of phosphoric acid.

A 7 and 30 tankage has been sold in Cleveland for several years at the uniform price of $17 per ton in single sacks or carloads. The latest quotations in Chicago range from $12.50 per ton for 6 and 35 tankage up to $15.50 for 9 and 20 tankage, this being the standard grade.

Muriate of potash is a product of the Stassfurt mines in Germany, and its sale is controlled by a German syndicate. It may be bought in New York or Cleveland at about 2 to 2¼ cents per pound. Both acid phosphate and tankage are fine, dry meals, in perfect condition to be used in the fertilizer drill, and mixing them does not alter their condition. Muriate of potash resembles common salt in appearance, except that it is usually somewhat yellowish in color. In its commercial condition it is about half actual potash.

A Business Method.

The cut, from The Farm Journal, tells it own story. The owner of this device is going to know hereafter just what each cow is doing. He will weigh each cow's milk as it is drawn, and then put it down on the paper in black and white—the milk record for each week. The prosperous farmer makes use of business methods. He knows what each animal is doing, and whether she gains or loses on particular kinds of feed. Guesswork is poor business on the farm, as elsewhere.

WEIGHING THE MILK.

And in this connection it may be mentioned that the pleasing, cleanly and economical practice of delivering milk in glass bottles is steadily increasing.

But He Realizes It Now.

Mrs. Benham—Many a true word is spoken in jest.

Mr. Benham—That's so. I little dreamed when I said, 'With all my worldly goods I thee endow,' that you would take every cent I had.—Twinkles.

The Velvet Bean.

Every one in Louisiana who last year planted velvet beans seems this season profuse in expressions of admiration for this new leguminous plant, which has come rather suddenly into the southern agricultural world as one of its most hopeful additions. As we understand it, over 100 bushels of these beans were used in this state last spring and summer experimentally, and the satisfaction given by the bean in the production of forage and as a fertilizing plant has been so great that the demand for the beans will be many times greater this season.

The peculiarity of this plant is its long period of growth, and while this promotes its peculiar work of fertilizing the soil by the accumulation of nitrogen therein it has made it somewhat difficult in some instances to secure the beans for seed, as in some cases the beans had not matured at the time of the first frosts and a further supply had to be secured from Florida.—Southern Farmer.

It is said that the emperor of China sat up all one night to hear the reading of Li Hung Chang's report of his travels round the world. Considering that it was all Li's, this report seems to have received undue attention.—New York Truth.

HALL—DOUD—At Los Angeles, Cal., February 16, 1899, Asa Hall of Randsburg and Miss Sadie Doud of Los Angeles.

John. L. Collins of Poleta is in town.

John Barnes is proprietor of the Capitol saloon.

Miss Mattie Wallace visited friends in town this week.

Oscar Hilton was down from Bishop early in the week.

Fred Burckhardt came up from Lone Pine last Saturday.

Bertrand Rhine has been appointed post-master of Independence.

Mrs. S. P. McKnight of Bishop was at the Norman House this week.

A cold north wind is blowing, and about half an inch of ice formed last night.

Hon. T. B. Rickey came down from Carson last Monday and wid remain for some time.

Ben H. Yandell, Esq., has returned from a visit to Bishop. His mother has been quite ill.

Dr. I. J. Woodin and his son Irving returned home this week after a month's visit to the borax fields.

J. C. Crocker, Henry Bell and John Schalton came down from Big Pine last Sunday, returning next day.

Orie Whiting has purchased the Nucleus House at Hawthorne. Guests of this house are afforded every comfort.

Mrs. E. J. Reynolds of Georges Creek and Miss Blanche Meysan of Lone Pine returned from Los Angeles last week.

A. O. Collins and W. L. Coats spent several days in town this week as witnesses in the Christie & Wise vs. Collins case.

The present cold snap will probably have the good effect of holding back the apple blossoms. Almond, apricot and peach trees are in full bloom.

Assemblyman Mack's bill providing for the levying of taxes by unincorporated towns and villages for the maintenance of a fire department, has become a law.

The Johnson brothers and McGinnis are sacking $100 ore at their recent strike in the Inyos. It is reported that Barnes and Anderson have struck some very rich ore.

Miss Emma Chalfant who has been the guest of Miss Lena Thompson of Camp Independence leaves this afternoon for Keeler, where Miss Mabel Chalfant is teaching school.

After one of the busiest sessions Congress adjourned on Saturday last. The curtain went down to the tune of our national hymn, and with a sigh of relief the members faced homewards.

The burning of a haystack and corral belonging to Lank & Kehoe in town last evening caused quite an excitement. It behooves everybody to keep a sharp lookout these windy days.

The bill to prevent the desecration of the United States flag by printing thereon advertisements, words or symbols of any kind has received the Governors signature and become a law.

Charley Summers came down from Bishop Wednesday. He says he has made his last shipment of beef cattle for the season. It was composed of fifty head of steers which sold for $2,400.

The only change in the Senatorial situation for the past week has been the withdrawal of Bulla of Los Angeles, his strength going to W. H. L. Barnes and giving that gentleman 22 votes. It is expected that the session will close on the 18th.

The case of Christie & Wise vs. John L. Collins et al has been set for June 26th at Bakersfield. On Monday last M. E. C. Monday Esq., accompanied by H. B. Abila arrived here from Los Angeles; the same day J. W. Ahern, Esq. and Roland Laird arrived from Bakersfield and both attorneys have been busy all the week taking depositions before J. D. Lewis Esq. for use at the trial. Both parties will probably start for home today. They are traveling by private conveyance.

THE WATER QUESTION—2.

Among the characters that Dickens so vividly portrays there is none that stands out in bolder relief than that of Micawber. He was always waiting for something to turn up. Dickens drew a type, and the type has innumerable living representatives in America to-day, and not a few in our immediate neighborhood. We seem to be all waiting for something to turn up anent the vital question of water. Expert testimony proves that 53 per cent of the water is lost between the division box and the town of Independence. The percentage of loss between the foothills and the division box is a matter of conjecture, but that it is enormous is the opinion of every one who has paid the least attention to the problem. The question arises, "Why this loss and this waste of this precious fluid?" There seems to be as many different reasons given as there are individuals who entertain them. Let us endeavor to analyze the situation divested of all prejudice. The laws of the State of California give certain rights to the original settlers and pioneers, and these rights have been confirmed by numerous decisions both of the State Courts and of the U. S. Courts Without these rights conceded to the original settlers there could have bten no development in mines, agriculture, grazing or horticulture. These pioneers are entitled to all the law allows them, and every citizen should back up by his moral force every tittle of their rights as defined by the laws. If the law bears hardly on the majority of the citizens, aside from the original locators and owners of these water rights, they have lawful processes to appeal to through the regular machinery of the judiciary. Any citizen who advocates any other method is not a good citizen. When these water rights were granted the State was very thinly settled, and it was a wise and just measure to encourage the settlement of the waste lands, and only a poor reward for the dangers incidental to a life on the frontier. These original pioneers have fought a good fight, have made the waste places habitable, and deserve higher rewards even than the soldiers who fight our battles; because the pioneer fought a bitter and never ending daily fight with the stubborn forces of nature with the spice of an occasional attack from the vindictive aborigines. These are the men that deserve a pension both from their State and from the nation. That they do not get it our County Hospitals and the ubiquitous mortgage will prove. They are of those upon whose backs are laid the heaviest burden of taxes for all purposes, and who cannot escape by swearing off, perjury, or securing a residence in another neighborhood, or having their wealth in transit when the assesser is around. Now while all this is absolutely true, there is no more reason now for continuing the private ownership and control of the water shed of this valley than there is for the private ownership of the air we breathe. Because our legislative Solons of a generation ago, who studied over the question of water rights by the fitful flare of candle light, made a legislativa blunder, it is no reason for us to continue their blunders any more than it is for us to go back to the days of tallow dips. All the rights that now inhere in certain individuals can be ascertained, valued and the equities maintained by the judiciary. To think otherwise or act otherwise would be anarchical. The basis of all law and all justice is the giving up of certain individual rights in order to preserve the higher rights of the citizens of the Nation. In the present instance the owners of the present water locations are unable to improve their property so as to get the most good out of it, either for themselves or for their fellow citizens. When the project of a new railroad is being discussed, nearly all the citizens owning land are willing to give up more or less of their property, because that which remains will be much more valuable. So it will be with these water rights. Until the State takes action in the matter the people in their collective capacity have the initiative in the matter to proceed according to law and mindful of the equities in the case, improve these water sheds so that the original locators can have twice the amount of water they now have at less labor cost, and there will be a surplus sufficient to irrigate hundreds of acres more than at present.

JOHN J. MCLEAN.

Hard Times In The South.

Letters received this week from Southern California tell of a fearful condition existing there. There has been scarcely any rain, and no crops will be raised. Hay costs $23 per ton and is scarce at that Cattle and horses are dying by the hundreds and those left are almost sure to perish, as they are now too poor to move. There will be the greatest distress among farmers. They managed to pull through last year, but now most of them are penniless and all of their stock of feed and provisions is about exhausted, with no chance of raising any this year. It is expected that if there is not an unprecedented amount of Spring rain that hundreds of people will have to be charitably assisted. While it will be dry here, our people do not know as a rule, how much they have to be thankful for.

There has been introduced in the Senate a bill providing for the keeping by the Secretary of State of a brand book, in which the brands used in California for marking animals shall be recorded. The wrongful use of a recorded brand or its defacement on an animal is made a felony.

Rudyard Kipling, though still very ill, has a chance for recovery. His eldest child, a daughter six years of age, died last week. Even should he recover, this visit to America will ever be remembered by the Kiplings as a time of deepest sorrow.

Tioga Road.

The Governor has expressed his approval of the Tioga Road Bill in the following message:

To the Senate of the State of California: I have the honor to inform your honorable body that I have approved of Senate Bill No. 11—An Act to provide for the construction of a free wagon road from the Mono Lake Basin to connect with a road called Tioga road, at or near the Tioga mine, and making an appropriation therefor.

I heartily approve of this bill for many reasons, among which are the following.: The road is a great necessity for the two great producing classes, the farmers and the miners, who reside on the eastern slope of the Sierras, between Sonora Pass on the north and Walker's pass on the south. There is no road over the mountains, other than pack-trails, for a distance of over 250 miles. citizens of our State residing in that section have been compelled for many years to travel to Nevada to sell their products and to trade there, for the reason that they have had no accessible roadway to the towns on the west side of the mountains. Though they have cheerfully borne their proportion of the taxes of California for many years, yet for want of a proper roadway they have not had the usual benefits incident to taxation. The great desire and necessity of the people of that part of the State for the construction of this road is manifested, among other things, by a very unusual offer on the part of the citizens, which is to guarantee the construction of the road for the amount appropriated, and a tender to the State of a proper bond therefor. A further guarantee has been made by a number of leading citizens that the maintenance of the road shall never become a claim upon or charge against the State of California. These guarantees have been filed with the Secretary of State. In view of the afore-mentioned and many other reasons, it is but just to the people inhabiting that region of the State, both east and west of the mountains, that this appropriation should be granted. Hence, I approve of the bill.

HENRY T. GAGE,
Governor of California.

SHALL PORTO RICO BE A STATE?

Our public men are trying to decide what action should be taken regarding the status of Porto Rico. We have never before had to deal with a similar condition where nearly a million people of a foreign tongue have been annexed. Neither have we ever had before such a reliable medicine for malaria, fever and ague as Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. It drives the poisons out of the system and establishes strength to resist future attacks.

Father O'Leary, a well known Roman Catholic priest and wit, was on very friendly terms with his neighbor, the Church of England vicar. They met on the road one day, when the vicar said excitedly, "Oh, Father O'Leary, have you heard the awful news?"

"No," says the priest, "what is it, at all?"

"Something awful," says the vicar. "The bottom has fallen out of purgatory, and all the Catholics have tumbled into hell!"

"Oh, dear, oh, dear," says Father O'Leary, "what a crushing the poor Protestants must have got!"—London Chronicle.

THE STORY OF A RAZOR.

YOUNG Mr. Johnson had already several razors when he bought a set of seven, each marked with a day of the week and arranged in order in a case. His beard was not heavy—indeed, his mustache was pale and wispy—but he was extremely neat, and he insisted on shaving himself. He argued that it was necessary to have many razors to have one always ready. There were the razors that his father had used before him, they were of French make, a handle with several extremely thin blades; there was a fat razor of boarding school days that was included in a swap of a sled for a banjo; there were razors of English and American make; but young Mr. Johnson's favorite was white-handled, and it was to him as the apple of his eye.

Mr. Johnson married when he was about 25 years old a pretty girl of 20. She danced, and played waltzes on the piano, and she was sweet and amiable.

YOUNG MR. JOHNSON.

They were happy, especially Sunday mornings when Mr. Johnson did not leave the house. They breakfasted late, and it was one of the wife's amusements to watch her husband shaving at his leisure. Those days he chose his white-handled razor. She would laugh at him when his face was covered with lather; she would keep saying, "Don't cut yourself, dear," and when his chin and cheeks appeared, smooth and shining, she would throw her arms about him, and cuddle against his breast, and say, "I never could love you if you had a beard," and then she would kiss him in the neck. And Mr. Johnson, holding the razor in the air above his head, would smile complacently.

They were happy in this foolish fashion for a year or so.

One morning Mr. Johnson did not leave the house, although the day was Tuesday, not Sunday. He did not shave himself; in fact, he had not shaved himself for two or three days. The next week a barber came and brought his favorite razor, and Mr. Johnson was clean and smooth for his coffin.

At first Mrs. Johnson insisted that her husband's things should remain just where he left them. And so in the bath-room the straps and the hones and the brushes and the soaps were ready to be used, and the razors were in order. The white-handled one was nearest the glass, and the others acknowledged its claim.

Mrs. Johnson would look at these things, and tears would come to her eyes. For the first month she kissed the white-handled razor daily. Her sister Maria, who had come to live with her—"until I die," said Lucy, "for I know I shall follow Harry soon"—discouraged her in "such nonsense." And gradually Mrs. Johnson began to find pleasure in life. One night when Mr. Mortimer called she was persuaded to play a waltz, and she even sang a pretty song, entitled, "Love for Eternity."

"DON'T CUT YOURSELF, DEAR."

Mr. Mortimer's calls were frequent. He was a thick-set fellow, with a bushy black beard. His vitality in a room stirred the pictures on the wall; chairs and sofas were uneasy until he had made a wise choice. He was prosperous in business and fond of farce-comedy. When he was dressed for a call or a dinner he smelled of musk. Mrs. Johnson became accustomed to him, and at the end of a year and a half she was Mrs. Mortimer.

The wedding was quiet, and even the bridegroom was comparatively quiet. There was a journey; New York and Washington hotels entertained "Mr. Mortimer and lady," and the routine of daily life began in the flat in which young Mr. Johnson had reigned.

Sunday came, and Mr. Mortimer dressed leisurely. After he had had his bath he strolled about in the bath-robe. He glanced at the newspaper, he cleaned a pipe, and then proceeded to bring out fresh underclothes and linen. Lucy in morning gown following him from room to room. Mr. Mortimer was putting on a boot. "Hullo!" he exclaimed; "I forgot to trim my corn!" He went into the bath-room, took the white-handled razor, and, stooping over, began operations. Lucy laughed and kept saying, "Look out, dear; don't cut yourself." And when he had pared almost to the quick, she said: "If I were you I'd keep that old razor for your corn. Perhaps you might sell the others. You'll never need them. I don't see how a woman can marry a man without a beard—he isn't a man." And she cuddled against his breast and kissed him below the right ear. A discreet maid coughed near the door and said: "Breakfast is served."—Boston Journal.

LAST LONDON "CHARLEY."

Who Still Goes His Rounds and Calls the Flying Hours.

An incident which has just occurred has brought to the minds of a Holborn police inspector and a few other Londoners one of those amazing incongruities of which London life can furnish so many examples.

Who would suppose that in the heart of London, within sound of the underground railway, and within sight of the motor car, a genuine "Charley" still goes his rounds and calls the hours in a loud voice the long night through?

This comedy—if you like to call it so—takes place with unfailing regularity in Ely place, Holborn. No spot could be more appropriate for the perpetuation of such a custom than this ancient precinct, where John of Gaunt, "time-honored Lancaster," drew his last breath, and where, if we are to believe Shakspeare, "good strawberries" ripened in the garden of the bishop of Ely, whose chapel still lifts its ancient, though much hidden, walls in Ely place.

After the reversion of the property to the crown in 1762 various arrangements were made whereby Ely place remained a private precinct under the government of commissioners. These commissioners still exercise their rule, which is fortified by acts of parliament, and their watchmen have legal power to arrest misdemeanants within Ely place and hale them to the nearest police station.

The night watchman in Ely place is required to cry the hours from 11 p. m. to 5 a. m. Nor may his duty be perfunctorily discharged. Four times along the length of Ely place must his cry of "parst eleven," or "parst twelve," etc., be heard. No policeman enters Ely place night or day unless specially summoned. Nor is the "Charley" who keeps watch and ward there within closed gates at night a guardian of mere empty offices.

Adjoining the place, and out by the aforesaid commissioners, are the Elymews dwellings. Here sixteen families are resident, and this little hive of humanity, as well as caretakers of Ely place proper, are under the "Charley's" direct protection, and have their slumbers punctuated by his melodious cries.

An Elephant's Teeth.

Whoever has looked inside an elephant's mouth has seen a strange sight. Elephants have no front teeth, and they never eat meat or any food that requires tearing apart. Eight teeth are all they have, two above and two below on each side, huge yellow molars as wide as a man's hand, and about two inches thick. Over these hay or fodder is sifted by the queerest, ugliest tongue that is literally hung at both ends, having no power of movement except in the middle, where it shifts back and forth from side to side, arching up against the roof of the big mouth like an immense wrinkled pink serpent.

There is nothing stranger than the working of an elephant's tongue, unless it be the working of his breathing apparatus when he sleeps. Elephants, like human beings, have two sets of teeth—the milk teeth, which are smaller than the permanent molars, fall out when the animals are about fourteen years old. These baby teeth, which are nevertheless enormous, are occasionally picked up by circus men among the fodder and preserved as curiosities.

The Oldest Postal System.

We find the first recorded postal system in the Persian empire, under Cyrus the Elder, but it is clear that Rome, of all the ancient States, possessed the best organized system of transmitting letters through its numerous provinces. All the great Roman roads houses were erected at a distance of five or six miles from each other. At each of these stations forty horses were constantly kept, and by the help of the relays it was easy to travel one hundred miles in a day. These services were intended for the State only, it being imperative to secure the rapid interchange of official communications.

In the time of Julius Caesar the system was so well organized that of two letters the great soldier wrote from Britain to Cicero at Rome the one reached its destination in twenty-six and the other in twenty-eight days. Private citizens had to trust to the services of slaves, and it is not till the end of the third century that we hear of the establishment of a postal system for private persons by the emperor Diocletian, but how long this system remained history does not say.

Traveler from frontier district, striking hotel where advanced fashions have obtained, observes with an expression of pleased surprise the finger-bowl set before him at the close of his meal. "What's that for, waiter?" "To wash your hands, sir." "I wish I'd a-know'd it 'fore I began my dinner."—Good Americans.

REGAINED HEALTH.

Gratifying Letters to Mrs. Pinkham From Happy Women.

"I Owe You My Life."

Mrs. E. WOOLHISER, Mills, Neb., writes:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I owe my life to your Vegetable Compound. The doctors said I had consumption and nothing could be done for me. My menstruation had stopped and they said my blood was turning to water. I had several doctors. They all said I could not live. I began the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it helped me right away; menses returned and I have gained in weight. I have better health than I have had for years. It is wonderful what your Compound has done for me."

"I Feel Like a New Person."

Mrs. GEO. LEACH, 1609 Belle St., Alton, Ill., writes:

"Before I began to take your Vegetable Compound I was a great sufferer from womb trouble. Menses would appear two and three times in a month, causing me to be so weak I could not stand. I could neither sleep nor eat, and looked so badly my friends hardly knew me.

"I took doctor's medicine but did not derive much benefit from it. My druggist gave me one of your little books, and after reading it I decided to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I feel like a new person. I would not give your Compound for all the doctors' medicine in the world. I can not praise it enough."

THE SCHOOL PLAYGROUND.

Its Abolition Is a Grievous Wrong to the Children.

This is an evil which has crept in with the tendency to centralize the schools. When in any place the schools begin to overflow, a movement to put up a larger building takes place, accompanied by an effort to create a high school department, not so much the need of the community as the ambitious dream of some principal who would be superintendent or some sort of central sun to a group of satellites.

This dream is too easily realized, because it flatters the people. Then there rises a preposterous structure of stone and brick. A house of many gables, out of keeping with everything, either public or private, in the place; a temple of vanity. Now is rung the knell of the school playground, for the new "high school," although it will house all the children from 5 to 15, must needs be surrounded by a fine lawn, studded with shrubbery and threaded by bluestone roads. The janitor has to employ an assistant to keep the grounds in order.

A shut in, penitentiarylike place has been evolved by the architect and school committee, gratifying to their pride and a deep wrong to the children. There are many wrongs about it. The one insisted upon here is the abolishing of the recess, that time honored joy of the American schoolboy and schoolgirl.—Isabella G. Oakley in Popular Science Monthly.

Major Lawrie and the Spider.

Major Lawrie is the hero of an interesting superstition. Before Atbara he discovered in the ventilator of his helmet an energetic spider, which came out in the evening and, having had his supper on flies, returned to his hiding place. Perhaps, remembering the story of Bruce and the spider, the major left his new friend unmolested and went into the Atbara fight with him. Men were killed all round, but Major Lawrie escaped without a scratch. At Omdurman he commanded a battery and again was unwounded. Meanwhile the spider slumbered in the helmet, waiting for the ridiculous human commotion to cease that he might come out and kill flies for supper.

When the hurly burly was over, Major Lawrie packed various articles to be sent home and among them the helmet and the spider. Too late, he remembered that he had sent his little friend on a long voyage without any larder. In great tribulation he hastened to London, opened the helmet box, expecting to find the spider a corpse, and was rejoiced to see him alive, and even vigorous. Stranger still, on the way to England he (we beg pardon—she) had produced two young spiders!—Public Opinion.

THE EXCELLENCE OF SYRUP OF FIGS is due not only to the originality and simplicity of the combination, but also to the care and skill with which it is manufactured by scientific processes known to the CALIFORNIA FIG SYRUP CO. only, and we wish to impress upon all the importance of purchasing the true and original remedy. As the genuine Syrup of Figs is manufactured by the CALIFORNIA FIG SYRUP CO. only, a knowledge of that fact will assist one in avoiding the worthless imitations manufactured by other parties. The high standing of the CALIFORNIA FIG SYRUP CO. with the medical profession, and the satisfaction which the genuine Syrup of Figs has given to millions of families, makes the name of the Company a guaranty of the excellence of its remedy. It is far in advance of all other laxatives, as it acts on the kidneys, liver and bowels without irritating or weakening them, and it does not gripe nor nauseate. In order to get its beneficial effects, please remember the name of the Company—

After-Effects of the GRIP

Grip is a treacherous disease. You think it is cured and the slightest cold brings on a relapse.

Its victims are always left in a weakened condition—blood impure and impoverished; nerves shattered. Pneumonia, heart disease and nervous prostration are often the result.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People will drive every trace of the poisonous germs from the system, build up and enrich the blood and strengthen the nerves. A trial will prove this. Read the evidence:

When the grip last visited this section Herman H. Eveler, of 11 W. Main St., Jefferson, Mo., a well-known contractor and builder, was one of the victims, and he has since been troubled with the after-effects of the disease. A year ago his health began to fail, and he was obliged to discontinue work. That he lives to-day is almost a miracle. He says:

"I was troubled with shortness of breath, palpitation of the heart and a general debility. My back also pained me severely.

"I tried one doctor after another and numerous remedies suggested by my friends, but without apparent benefit, and began to give up hope. Then I saw Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People extolled in a St. Louis paper, and after investigation decided to give them a trial.

"After using the first box I felt wonderfully relieved and was satisfied that the pills were putting me on the road to recovery. I bought two more boxes and continued taking them.

"After taking four boxes of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People I am restored to good health. I feel like a new man, and having the will and energy of my former days returned, I am capable of transacting my business with increased ambition.

"Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are a wonderful medicine and any one suffering from the after-effects of the grip will find that these pills are the specific." H. H. EVELER.

THE CZAR OF RUSSIA.

A CHARACTER SKETCH OF THIS MIGHTY RULER.

His Peace Proposal Has Given to Him a Character that History Will Preserve Immortal—He Is Steadfast, Frank and Fearless.

An admirable character sketch of Czar Nicholas II. of Russia is drawn by the English journalist, W. T. Stead, in the American Monthly. Nicholas II., says the writer, in stature does not resemble his father, who was a son of Anak. It is a mistake, however, to speak of him as if he were exceptionally slight. He is about the same height as Gen. Gordon, whom he resembles in other things besides the number of his inches. When he rides or sits the Emperor seems as tall as most men. When he stands he is a little taller than Lord Nelson or Napoleon Bonaparte. Good stuff, says the old adage, is often put up in little bundles, and the giant in popular legend is usually as dull as he is huge. In physique the Emperor is wiry and vigorous. One who sees him every day told me that physically Nicholas is a much healthier man than his father.

The first and most conspicuous characteristic of Alexander III. was the solidity of his mental temperament. He was by no means dull. But he was slow. He put his foot down like an elephant, and when he put it down he was not quick to take it up again. The characteristic of his son and successor is quite different. Alertness, exactness, lucidity, and definiteness are four excellent qualities in a man, and the Emperor has them all. With all this there is an absolute absence of anything even distantly approaching priggishness. Many years ago Mr. Gladstone described the present Emperor as a charming type of the best of our public school boys. He was frank, fearless, perfectly natural, and simplicity itself. Nicholas II. is no longer a boy. He has borne for several trying years the burden of one of the greatest empires in the world. But he is still as absolutely simple and unaffected as he was when Mr. Gladstone met him in Copenhagen fifteen years ago. There is still in him all the delightful schoolboy abandon of manner, a keen sense of humor, and a hearty, outspoken frankness in expressing his opinions which makes you feel that you are dealing with a man whose character is as transparent as crystal. Add to all this a modesty as admirable as it is rare, and it must be admitted that even if the net human product should fall short of being a great ruler, he has at least all the qualities which make men beloved by their fellows. The bright, clear blue eye, the quick sympathetic change of feature, the merry laugh, succeeded in a moment by an expression of noble gravity and of high resolve, the rapidity and grace of his movements, and even his curious little expressive shrug of the shoulders, are all glimpses of a character not often found unspoiled by power.

Those who know him best appear to love him most and naturally enough each one thinks his only fault is that he is too ready to sacrifice his own convenience and his own wishes to oblige others. A more dutiful son never sat on a throne. He is singularly happy in his marriage, and the Emperor of Russia will never lack one of the most intelligent and loyal of chancellors while his wife lives. As his parents before him set Europe an example of domestic unity and felicity, so Nicholas II. maintains the honorable and happy tradition. He is loyal in his friendships and slow to part with any of those who are in his own or were in his father's service.

Distinctions of His Reign.

So far his reign has been distinguished by three things. First, his frank recognition of the fact that until he found his feet and had acquired some experience in the business of governing it became him to serve his apprenticeship modestly and silently.

The second salient feature in his reign was marked by a significant blend of the two conflicting tendencies—the intuitive instinct which enabled him to divine the right thing to be done and the modest reluctance to impose his will upon the more experienced administrators who thwarted and crippled his policy. I refer to the generous initiative taken by the Czar in the direction of an amelioration of the harshness of the Polish regime as he inherited it from his father. In that he showed true insight and a keen sympathy with subjects who were suffering from undoubted grievances. But the forces of reaction and the jealousy of a dominant bureaucracy, aided perhaps by the somewhat unreasonable expectations of some of the Poles, checked the full realization of his designs. To some this may seem an admission that he was lacking in strength. It would be more just to recognize that he felt he was lacking in experience. He was young to the responsibilities of government. It was better to bide his time. Safely and slow—they stumble who run fast.

There is one thing about the peace rescript which no one can deny. It was splendidly audacious as well as magnificently ambitious. Wise it may be or foolish, but mean, petty or unworthy it was not. Will he have the nerve to stick to it? The resolution to put it through? The strength to overpower the immense forces which will be banked together to defeat his generous and most sensible design? That is the crux of the whole question. Let it never be forgotten that Nicholas was not only born in the purple, but that he has, as his sires and grandsires, as imperious a series of monarchs as ever swayed a scepter.

THE SAGACIOUS HERO.

He Insisted on Certain Conditions Before Manifesting His Bravery.

"No," declared the Captain, "I positively decline to lead my company up that hill."

"Sir," exclaimed the Colonel, "do you know that what you are saying is rank insubordination?"

"Call it insubordination or what you will," the Captain returned, "but I refuse to go."

The Colonel was furious. The company that he had detached for the purpose of storming the hill and capturing the fort on top of it was the only one that could be spared, and unless his plans as arranged were executed the whole campaign would fail. Not only that, but his little army would in all probability be cut off from the main body and wiped out of existence.

It was a critical moment. The Captain could be court martialed and shot for his refusal to obey orders, but what of it? Every man was needed. To court martial and shoot the obstinate Captain would not be to take the hill and the fort. He was the only man who could do it with the force at his command.

What was to be done? The Colonel gnawed his mustache and thought hard. At last he decided to appeal to the Captain instead of ordering him.

"Think, man, think of the glory that you will win if you do this thing," he urged.

"I know all about that," the Captain replied.

"Well, for heaven's sake, don't you want to be a hero? Think of it! The entire nation will applaud you!"

"I realize that, and I am anxious to become a hero; but I positively refuse to do it until you drive all these correspondents back and keep them off the field. I propose, if I do this business, to retain the sole magazine rights on it. I'm not going to do a heroic thing and then let somebody else get $500 a page for writing it up!"

So the hill was taken, and the farseeing Captain is now living in luxury and winning new laurels with his pen.—Cleveland Leader.

SCHOOLS IN THE ORIENT.

There Is Abundant Chance to Get an English Education There.

Throughout British territory, in the Orient, churches and schools are scattered about, and always are at headquarters, military or civil. All the subjects of her Majesty the Queen can enter the Christian churches and Christian Sunday schools if they wish. They are not the "destitute heathen" of the old-time phrase—"destitute of the means of grace;" and the "Eurasians"—Europe-Asians, hybrids—ambitious to be classed as "Europeans," crowd promptly into the Christian churches. Their main rush is for two, either the Protestant Episcopal or Methodist; first in preferment the Episcopal, the old established church of England, because there all officials go—the viceroy, the local governors and their families—whoever represents the ruling power; and the next the Methodist churches, which, as here, have the popularizing, drawing faculty, being zealous and energetic.

There, as here, the Roman Catholic churches get more people than any other church. Their pictures of saints and angels and the Madonna and the Savior, their dressed statues and their processional celebrations the non-educated can get hold of at once, as a story; and a story with points of resemblance to their inherited faith. Christianity's heroes and heroines march well into line with sacred biography which they before were familiar with. Their old-time heroes and heroines were very grotesque, but, for all that, sacred; sacred somewhat. That whole people is grotesque. Their art is grotesque. We are different. But we are not symmetrical. In fact, we also are grotesque.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Preferred the Professions.

Says a writer in the Manchester Guardian:

"A lady of my acquaintance who is a proprietress in County Galway is in the habit of receiving her own rents. One day, when a tenant farmer had pleaded long and unsuccessfully for an abatement, he exclaimed as he handed over the money:

"'Well, my lady, all I can say is that if I had my time over again it's not a tenant farmer I'd be. I'd follow one of the learned professions.'

"The proprietress gently replied that even in the learned professions there were losses as well as gains, and, perhaps, he would have found professional life as precarious as farming.

"'Ah, my lady, but how can that be?' replied the son of St. Patrick. 'If you're a lawyer—win or lose, you're paid. If you're a doctor—kill or cure, you're paid. If you're a priest—heaven or hell, you're paid.'"

FOR EVENING WEAR.

OPERA CLOAK AND TWO BALL GOWNS DESCRIBED.

Current Styles in Dressing the Hair—The Pompadour Still Rules—Striking Fashions in Headwear that Indicate the Trend of the Mode.

New York correspondence:

AINTY as miladi's opera cloak is likely to be in color and material, its cut is distinctly practical. The sleeves are sure to be big enough to slip on easily, the folds are generous and enveloping, the collar softly rises about the neck enough to secure coziness, while at the back there is no stiffness to interfere with the hair, or to push out the valuable combs that confine the back locks. The cloaks are either lined with fur, or are interlined so that they are really warm. Time was when an opera cloak meant an extravagant wardrobe, but now it is not so. You can spend as much as you want on the garment, but you can have one very pretty and suitable at a price that matches reasonable expenditure on the rest of your outfit. The cloak pictured here follows one of the prettiest models, but was made of nun's veiling in a lovely shade of gray. The garment was interlined with flannel, a chamois yoke being part of its protection (though unguessed by the observer) front and back to cover more cosily the bared neck and back that may sometimes be under the cloak. The collar of white velvet-faced cloth gave a dressy touch. Such a cloak carried out in gray velvet with ermine lining and finishing at collar, would be no more graceful, though much more costly than this silk-lined cloth one.

A DANCING GOWN THAT SHOULD LAST.

Hoods are being worn a good deal this winter, but for dressy wraps they are unusual, or else are of a type that does not endanger the coiffure. The arrangement of the hair must be kept at its best. Though the current styles in hair dressing permit a deal of latitude to personal taste, there never was a time when so great a degree of nicety was demanded in whatever mode is chosen. The pompadour still rules, yet the stiff upstanding roll, hardening the features and solidifying the hair, that many wear and call a pompadour is going to bring the fashion into disfavor before many are willing to give up the style in its more graceful adaptations. There is no fashion of wearing the hair which is subject to so many variations. Rolled lightly out from the ears and the sides of the head below the ears and flattened a little on top, with perhaps just the trace of a part, the pompadour is quite a different matter from the high-lifted forehead puff, flattening at the temples and bagging down at the back where it blends with the low knot. When drawn loosely from the forehead, and when rolled up sharply from the brow, presenting back of the roll a sudden slant down to the coil, the pompadour seems two very different styles. Puffed widely from all sides and surmounted by a single upstanding tip of the ornamental butterfly that guards the high coiffure, it is another and more worldly matter than when rippled easily into the low "schoolgirl" looped braid that many of the young matrons and second-season belles are wearing this winter, to the scorn of the schoolgirl herself. Another current fad is shown in this group of coiffures. It is a toque of long nap felt exactly the shade of the hair. Where the hair ends and the toque begins becomes a question at a distance. That shown here was brown felt. It followed the head lines closely, otherwise the match between hair and felt would create an awkward effect.

Handsome new evening gowns, though beautifully trimmed, first impress the beholder with their simplicity. The model of this third picture is illustrative of this point. Its simplicity was of a sort that calls for beauty of outline and material, and its trimming, while by no means complicated, was extremely decorative. The chief material was white cloth, and the skirt's circular flounce was rose colored silk, a drapery of beautifully embroidered net following its outline. The trimming of the bodice harmonized with this. If a woman wished to emphasize height and slenderness especially, the lift of net should be on the shoulder above the draped hip, instead of on the opposite side.

The time for a new gown if you do not have new ones each season, is when a new fashion is pronounced in character, because styles for the next few seasons will only be variations. The princess design of this model was very pretty, its beaded net bodice drapery graceful and simple. White crystal beading about the edges of the fawn colored silk is in the latest style just now, and cannot be out of taste for some seasons. The petticoat shown on the right side was white satin draped with the beaded net, and was equally well chosen. Fawn color has been fashionable some time, and, especially in combination with white, can never be out of taste; besides, it cleanses well. The net sleeves showing the arm through are becoming and fashionable. This shoulder finish is a little conventional, perhaps, but for a gown to be worn for general evening use it is better than some of the more pronounced strap-sleeved, droop-draped affairs.

The American Indian is modest and reasonable in his headgear compared to what refined and stylish women are now venturing. Take a woman in silhouette and the array of upstanding and outstarting points her hat presents leads one to expect streaks of paint and a tomahawk when she "lights up." It would take a dozen and more pages to cover the field of the season's millinery, but the examples illustrated will give an idea of what you may do for a street hat. As suggesting the oddities now permissible the specifications of the middle two hats of these four are significant. The upper one was folded white velvet, a spread sea gull skimming its billows, the breast overhanging its forward crest, the wings pointing up along its side curve. The tail fanned straight up at the back and was re-enforced, surely without consulting the taste of the gull, by lovely pale yellow bird-of-paradise sweeps. The delicacy of grays, whites and pale yellow kept the hat tasteful, pronounced as it was. The toque beneath it was green velvet almost hidden on the right side by a flock of birds, folds of the velvet rising against them on the left. On the left hand hat of this quartet the only odd characteristic was in the placing of its two quills, and that is a point that holds with wings and all sorts of feathers. It seems likely, too, to continue for some time. The last of this showing was the nearest of the lot to conventionality. It was the low crowned, medium brimmed, trimmed all around type, the season's tendency to striking effects finding expression in it only in the size of its velvet flowers.

Topics of Times

The domain of Achilleion in Corfu has been bequeathed by the Empress Elizabeth to her eldest daughter, the Archduchess Gisela, wife of Prince Leopold of Bavaria. Achilleion is one of the most magnificent royal residences in the world, and it is said that 15,000,000 francs was expended by the empress in building and decorating the palace and in laying out the beautiful grounds and gardens.

The wife of an English clergyman has made a collection of all the buttons placed in the offertory bags during the last two or three years, and has fastened them to cardboard in various cunning shapes of animals, birds and flowers. As a bazar is shortly to take place in connection with the church she has had these button pictures photographed, and copies will be on sale at the exhibition.

A fine of $15,000 has been paid to the London Goldsmith's Company by a Holborn dealer on whose premises "antique silver" of modern manufacture was found. An eminent dealer in the trade says that if the public is taken in by deceptions of that kind they have themselves to blame for it, because respectable dealers who sell at market prices invariably give a certificate with the goods.

The best hotel in San Juan, Porto Rico, charges $2 a day, but the sleeping-rooms all open into courts, have no outside windows and are to the last extremely hot. Under Spanish law, in towns where houses join, no outside windows are allowed. This is to avoid the danger of dirt from the interior blowing onto adjacent roofs and contaminating the water, as all the supply is collected from the rainfall and stored in cisterns, from which it is drawn by small force pumps in those of greater pretension.

Epicures in the East are developing a taste for minature specimens of the earth's products. To supply the demand in the larger cities for young vegetables, such as the French consider the most delicate and appetizing, the truck farmers bring to market tiny potatoes, turnips, carrots, cauliflower, and even heads of cabbage the size of a base-ball. Such vegetables are, it is said, more easily digested, their fiber being tender and succulent, instead of tough and often a woody nature, as the growth arrives at maturity.

In the collection of books belonging to the late Edward W. Wells, of Hartford, recently disposed of at auction, was an old American geography, dating back a century and a half, its maps indicating the limited knowledge of the territory of the continent which then prevailed. The great lakes were named Superior, Illinois, Huron, Erie and Frontenac. New England was a little patch on the chart, reaching up to the St. Lawrence River, with no State divisions indicated. The Ohio River was set down as the Ovo. Elizabeth Town was the chief town in New Jersey.

United States Consul Eugene Gumain, of Zurich, Switzerland, says that American goods are making rapid headway in Switzerland, especially machinery, tools, hardware and similar lines, and are rapidly supplanting Swiss and other European manufactures. Swiss watches are suffering from the competition of American watches in all parts of the world. Japan furnishes the latest illustration. Until a few years ago Swiss manufacturers had a practical monopoly in Japan, but they have been nearly driven out by the competition of the American watch.

The annual statistics published by the French ministry of agriculture indicate that the consumption of the flesh of horses, mules and donkeys is steadily increasing in Paris. The number of stalls at which it is offered for sale now reaches 193. The number of horses brought to the shambles for slaughter was 21,677, of mules 52 and of donkeys 310, but 734 horses, a mule and seven donkeys were condemned as unfit for human food, so that the total killed and consumed was 20,933 horses, 51 mules and 303 donkeys. The prime cuts fetched about a franc a pound, some of the inferior parts making little more than 10 centimes per pound.

One of the oldest maritime fictions has received its deathblow by the raising of the American flag over Guam, in the Ladrone Islands. According to sailors, thousands of vessels cleared for Guam from ports all over the world each year, but none ever arrived there. Clearing for Guam was done by ships which wished to conceal their real destination. According to maritime law, when once a vessel has cleared for a port it must proceed there by the most direct route or give a satisfactory explanation. Guam was a closed port under the Spanish rule and ships could always give that as a reason for not going there after having cleared for the place.

The Ural Mountains, between Russia and Asia, have been until now the only source from which platinum has been procured for the international market. Its part formed over 25 per cent. in the universal production of that precious metal. A small group of platinum mines, concentrated in the Verkhotursk district of the Government of Perm, includes about seventy separate mines, of which only forty are being worked and the remaining thirty are either inactive or under investigation. During 1897, the production of platinum amounted to about six tons. No new veins of platinum have been discovered during late years, and those now existing will soon be exhausted.

The trolley car and the bicycle have had similar effects. A curious indirect result of the appearance of these two inventions has been definitely shown by a discussion at a meeting of the American Hay-Making Association. One of the topics for discussion was "The Effect of the Bicycle and the Trolley Car Upon the Consumption of Hay." One of the speakers gave the following estimates of the number of horses displaced in eight large cities by the appearance and general use of these means of transportation: Philadelphia, 50,000; Chicago, 75,000; New York, 40,000; Baltimore, 25,000; St. Louis, 10,000; Cincinnati, 10,000; Richmond, Va., 25,000; Toledo, 15,000; total, 240,000.

"REMEMBER THE MAINE."

Capt. Sigsbee Denies that the Navy Used This Motto.

Capt. Sigsbee, writing of the destruction of his battleship in the Century, denies that "Remember the Maine!" was used as a motto by the navy in the late war with Spain. He also indicates a perfectly proper use of the phrase by patriotic Americans. He says:

We have heard much of the motto, "Remember the Maine." If we are satisfied that the Maine was blown up from the outside we have a right to remember her with indignation; but without more conclusive evidence than we now have we are not right if we charge criminality to persons. Therefore I conceive that the motto, "Remember the Maine," used as a war cry would not have been justifiable. I should like to make the point here, as I have made it elsewhere, that this great and free country, with its education, good intention, and universal moral influence, may go to war to punish, but not to revenge. Improperly applied, the motto, "Remember the Maine," savors too much of revenge, too much of evil for evil; but it may be used in an entirely worthy sense.

During the recent war with Spain about seventy-five men were killed and wounded in the United States navy. Only fifteen were killed. On board the Maine 254 men were killed outright and others died later—more than seventeen times as many as were killed in the United States navy by the Spanish land and naval forces during the entire war. In the way that the men of the Maine died and suffered there was enough of the heroic to provide a sound foundation for the motto, "Remember the Maine." Let me dismiss the prevailing impression that this motto was used in the United States navy, in the recent war, as a battle signal. No United States naval vessel has entered into action flying the signal, "Remember the Maine." I am glad that it can be so stated; yet one may excuse many mistaken impressions of the heat of action.

To this the editor of the Century adds: It may be said on the authority of Capt. John R. Bartlett, during the war chief intelligence officer of the navy: "The signal, 'Remember the Maine,' has never been displayed on a United States man-of-war or by the army or navy, with one exception. A signal quartermaster (an enlisted man) of the Coast Signal Service hoisted the signal from the station at Port Eads, at the mouth of the Mississippi, when a transport loaded with troops was passing out to sea. In reporting the passing out of the transport, as was his duty, the quartermaster added to his message to headquarters the fact of display of signal, which was received with great enthusiasm by the troops. He was severely reprimanded by return message over the wires."

Advice to Boys.

Boys who take a great interest and an active part in outdoor sports often bring needless ills upon themselves by over-exertion and want of proper care after violent exercise. Attacks of pneumonia or inflammation of the lungs frequently occur from getting very warm and then cooling off too suddenly.

When about to engage in a game of ball or any sport that requires continued activity it is best to lay aside the outer garment and put it on again when the game is finished; and instead of sitting down to "cool off," it is safer to walk around for awhile. It is also dangerous to drink large quantities of cold water when very warm, as the system receives a shock which may lead to sickness.

To go in swimming after a long walk through the hot sun is also injurious, as the blood is driven to the internal organs from the surface of the body and produces congestion, and cramps are also liable to occur, which in many cases have been the cause of death by drowning. It is always safer to wait until the body has cooled before plunging into the water, which is generally of a lower temperature than the body.

Violent exercise taken occasionally will not develop the strength as well as a regular amount continued every day. If a boy wishes to develop his muscles let him play ball, row a certain time every favorable day. Let him cease at the moment a sense of weariness or disinclination seizes him. The next day he will be able to stand a little more exertion, and so by degrees he will attain a certain standard, and have a reserve force of strength that will be the foundation of continued good health in the future.

JOURNALISM IN AUSTRIA.

Ludicrous Revelations of an Editor Brought to Trial for Libel.

Some curious facts have been brought to light in the course of an action for libel brought against the editor of the Neunkirchener Zeitung, a provincial weekly paper with a large circulation in Neunkirchen and district. Neunkirchen is a flourishing town about sixty miles from Vienna.

The editor, Carl Kulf, urged in extenuation of his misdemeanor that he was so occupied with his duties as a shoemaker that he had no time to properly discharge his editorial work, which he only undertook as a supplementary occupation. His salary as editor was £5 per annum.

Judge—You do not seem to possess the training and education necessary to an editor.

Herr Kulf—That is not necessary at all.

Judge—But an editor must at least be able to write an article.

Herr Kulf—Oh, no. I cut all my articles out of other papers.

Judge—Who acted as editor in your absence?

Herr Kulf—A hatter lived next door to the office, and he used to receive the correspondence and hand it over to the printers. The printers published what interested them.

Judge—These are extraordinary conditions for a town so near the capital of Austria.

Herr Kulf—It is not only in Vienna that proper ideals of the mission of the press are in vogue. I always praise the townspeople who deal with me and pay their bills regularly, and "pitch into" those who buy their shoes elsewhere and do not settle their debts. The Neunkirchener Zeitung is a paper with principles. It receives a subvention from the local authorities.

Judge—How do you obtain the subvention?

Herr Kulf—I undertook to fully report all the Mayor's speeches, chronicle his small doings and shower praise on his administration.

Herr Kulf was finally sentenced to a fine for not exercising that supervision over his paper which an editor is in Austria legally compelled to do.—London Mail.

The guillotine of love is a sharp tongue.

The longest thing is a loveless marriage.

A man's wife and his money are soon parted.

Flannels keep out as much sentiment as they do cold.

When love comes of age it does not grow hopeless, only more selfish.

Not even a truthful looking-glass can convince vanity that it is not beautiful.

The longer a man meets the expectations of his wife the surer she is to be suspicious of him.

A woman's consolation about death is that she will know what her neighbors said about her.

There are so many dupes because there is so much vanity; weak men and all women are dupes.

The worst danger of all is when she shows you photographs of herself when she was a baby.

The saddest thing is to expect nothing, then to hope, and then to find you were right the first time.

All people when first wedded cannot conceive of heaven without marriage; afterward most of them cannot conceive of marriage without the other place.

Knew His Nickname.

It was said of the late Prof. Lincoln, of Brown University, that nothing made a greater impression on those who knew him than his tremendous earnestness. One of his former pupils says that no other professor of his day talked so little in the class-room, and no other secured such perfect order and decorum.

In his presence the most volatile became temporarily sedate. Work began at the first moment of the recitation hour, and lasted to the closing one. But nobody fancied that Prof. Lincoln, with all his gravity, was devoid of a sense of humor.

"M. Tull Cicero," began a student to translate one day.

"M. Tull! M. Tull!" exclaimed the professor. "Why not give the gentleman the whole of his name?" And without moving a muscle of his face, he demanded, "How should I like to be called Linc.?"

This was a little too much for even the hushed atmosphere of the Latin room, and brought down the house. Nine out of ten of the boys never called him anything else but Linc., and he knew it, too, and no doubt did not dislike it, for it was a term of positive endearment.

But for the student who habitually neglected his work Prof. Lincoln had no mercy; such a student might expect to be metaphorically annihilated by a few clearly cut sentences.—Youth's Companion.

A Flight of Fancy.

"That dull Miss Wiggs doesn't seem to have a particle of imagination."

"Yes, she has; she thinks she can sing."

ISSUED EVERY FRIDAY.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.,

FRIDAY, MARCH 17 1899

All during the last campaign the San Francisco Chronicle asserted that the Central Pacific debt question was settled and that the government would get every dollar due. The arguments of Maguire and other Democrat orators were pronounced buncombe, and no epithet was considered too mean to apply to the Democrats who were insisting that the election of the Republican ticket would mean the forgiveness of the debt. Since the election, however, the Chronicle has experienced quite a change of heart. The proprietor of that paper has found out that while he is good enough to work for the company he is not yet in line for United States Senator. This discovery angered the genial Mike, and he finds himself in a mood to analyze the settlement that has been made with the Central Pacific, and he concludes that the government is worse off than it was before. Instead of old promises to pay we have new ones and in order to get them the land grant of the railroad, valued at $12,500,000 has been released as security. Verily, Mike takes his turn down for Senator very hard.

There is now in the field a small army of "experts" whose business it is to go about the country making examinations of mining claims in all stages of development. Men thus engaged have assumed a great responsibility, and in passing judgment on mines have not only their own interest at stake but their opinion usually affects many others. A realizing sense of this responsibility seems to make some men over cautious and others pay little heed to the result of their report, being satisfied to receive the agreed fee for their opinion. Fortunately the tendency seems to be towards the conservative side, for the most prominent men in the business are generally well known conservatives, and the lesser lights finding that a bad error of judgment is likely to result disastrously in the future, are falling in line and condemning almost everything they go to see, and perhaps by so doing make fewer mistakes. A would-be investor may have occasion to look back with regret at a lost opportunity, but such regrets are of a somewhat different nature from those occasioned by large sums lost on unsuccessful "good things."

The results of the session of the Legislature so far as the mining industry is concerned will be chiefly two things—the appropriation for a Paris exhibit in which the miners will receive fair recognition and the amendment to the State law of location doing away with the preliminary notice. The requirement of $50 worth of work within sixty days will remain, according to the present agreement and understanding, but instead of having to post and record at the county seat a preliminary notice of location and having to file a second notice sixty days later, but one notice will be required, but this must be recorded with the County Recorder as now.

If any faith is to be reposed in the sworn testimony of officers, enlisted men, regulars and surgeons, then General Miles has maintained his claim that either through connivance of a fraudulent nature or incompetency in some department, or the stupidity of those to whom is entrusted the choosing of food for soldiers, our troops at Santiago and Puerto Rico were supplied during the war with meat unfit for human consumption. All the "explanations" combined of contractors and army officials distant from the scene will not suffice to wipe out the damning fact.

The Stratton primary election law resembles in a considerable degree, the measure passed in the last session, which the Supreme Court threw out on technical grounds. The purpose of the law is praiseworthy, and we are hopeful that the results may be good. It puts the people to a great deal of expense and trouble, however, and adds to the complications of politics; a fact which is rather in favor of the skilled political worker and against the average citizen.

According to a Pittsburg paper an Alderman of Chicago has fined a resident of that city $25 for lying. The statement is highly improbable. In the first place an Alderman has no such authority, and in the second place he would not consider a lie an offence. It must be remembered that Chicago is the center of the embalmed beef industry.

A female swindler in New York is likely to escape a second trial because the prosecuting witness while on the stand the first time was so shamefully abused that he does not propose to undergo the experience again. There ought to be a lesson in this to courts. To be a witness is really no crime.

When we consider that from eight to twelve feet of snow covers many portions of the State of Michigan we are disposed to overlook the criticisms of California weather lately made by a Detroit journalist.

A naval officer has declined promotion because he did not think he had earned it. While there is supposed to be nothing new under the sun, occasionally some citizen does manage to establish a precedent.

A man who bought a saloon and found that the liquid he supposed to be whiskey was nothing but weak tea has a right to protest. There isn't a snake in a whole shelf full of tea.

A letter from Sacramento states that the session of the Legislature will probably be continued all next week.

How Grant Saved Two Nations From War.

Hon. John Russell Young, a former United States minister to China, regards General Grant's part in arranging a treaty of peace between China and Japan as one of the shining achievements of his career. Writing of "When Grant Went Round the World" in The Ladies' Home Journal, Mr. Young says Prince Kung, then a sort of regent for China, in his conversations at Peking with General Grant, talked with earnestness upon the relations between China and Japan. This led to a message from the prince to the mikado, an extraordinary incident little known in the histories, and the whole business in time to be so managed by the general that war between the two nations was postponed. "At Nikko, Japan, General Grant met the Japanese ministers, who came by the mikado's command, to discuss with him the message he had brought from Prince Kung and Li Hung Chang. Count Ito, secretary of the interior; Count Saigo, the minister of war; Count Inouye, foreign minister, and Mr. Yoshida, the Japanese envoy to Washington, composed the embassy. They sat in a little temple (the afternoon sultry, a thunder storm rattling among the hills) and discussed the issues. In the end was a letter addressed to Prince Kung and the Japanese prime minister, containing suggestions which were accepted by both governments. It was a basis of peace not to be broken for many years. So it will be seen that there were useful days, as well as days of pageantry, in Japan. General Grant in time became not alone the friend but the companion of the mikado and his counselors."

WAR STATISTICS.

In time of war France puts 370 out of every 1,000 of her population in the field; Germany, 310; Russia, 210.

Over 1,000,000 Frenchwomen were made widows and 3,000,000 French children fatherless by Napoleon's campaigns.

Little Switzerland has an enormous army in proportion to population. The population is 2,900,000; the standing army, 126,000.

In proportion to the numbers engaged, Waterloo was the bloodiest battle of modern times. Over 35 per cent of the men engaged were killed or wounded.

The largest standing army is that of Russia, 800,000 men; the next in size that of Germany, 592,000; the third that of France, 555,000; the fourth, Austria, 323,000, after which come Italy with 235,000, England with 210,000, Turkey with 166,000 and Spain with 140,000.

The Krupp steel 130 ton gun has a range of 15 miles and can fire two shots a minute. The shot weighs 2,600 pounds and 700 pounds of powder are required for a charge. The cost of a single round from this gun is $1,500, and it is said that the gun cannot be fired more than 50 or 60 times. The cost of the piece is $475,000.—Boston Herald.

TO LAKE TAHOE

A TRIP OF RARE INTEREST.

Passengers on west-bound overland trains on Central Pacific Railroad are respectfully notified that during the excursion season, commencing May 1st and closing October 1st, a delightful trip to LAKE TAHOE can be enjoyed (losing but one day in their journey) by taking the Express train of the Virginia & Truckee Railroad, leaving Reno at 7:10 a m, arriving at Carson City at 8:25 a m, where well-equipped stages leave promptly for Glenbrook, Lake Tahoe, connecting with Lake Tahoe steamer for Tahoe City, there connecting with Moody & Co.'s stages for Truckee, arriving same evening where connection is made with west-bound passenger train of Central Pacific Railroad. Through tickets, Reno to Truckee, by above route, for sale at Ticket Office, Reno, $6.00. East-bound passengers can leave Truckee early in the morning (Through Tickets for sale at Stage Office in Truckee) make the trip over the above described route, arriving at Reno same evening.

VIRGINIA CITY & THE COMSTOCK

Passengers may also take train mentioned at Reno for Virginia City, 52 miles, where an entire day may be pleasantly and profitably spent examining the famous Comstock Mines (now being worked to a perpendicular depth of 3,100 feet) with their massive hoisting and pumping machinery. Returning, see Time-Table above Round Trip Tickets for sale at Ticket Office Reno.

JOHN J. MCLEAN,
Observer.

There was a killing frost this morning, the temperature being 25.9 deg. just before sunrise. In March, 1898, we had killing frosts up to the the 27th. The lowest temperature occurred on the 14th, being 19 deg. above zero. There is still hope for some of the deciduous fruits.

SUPERIOR COURT PROCEEDINGS.

Hon Walter A. Lamar, Judge.

FRIDAY, March 17, 1899.

W. L. Coats vs. Hillside Water Co.—Venire issued for special jury returnable on 21st inst. at 10 a. m.

Dr. G. P. Doyle has gone to Bishop for a few days.

This is the day that an Irishman can drink whiskey and not see snakes.

Charley Rose got back yesterday morning from a trip to San Francisco

George Willis will arrive this evening from his trip to Stockton with McCaffrey.

White Smith, Esq., came down from Bishop Wednesday, returning yesterday.

In memory of the birthday of the good St. Patrick our young people will indulge in a social hop this evening.

Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Eibeshutz arrived home Wednesday evening from a visit of six weeks duration pleasantly spent at San Francisco.

There was a heavy south wind blowing several days this week and a slight fall of snow high up in the mountains. There was no precipitation in the valley.

Quite a number of Independence people took a ride to the Fort last evening. Wonder why they took so many oil cans and bells and triangles and things? Maybe it won't be green away.

Barnes and Anderson are opening up their new gold discovery and are reported to be meeting with good success. The ore is high grade, going over $100 a ton, and the vein appears to be permanent.

It is reported that a copper prospect near Soda Springs has been sold to San Francisca parties for $21,000, the full amount being paid in cash. There are a lot of good prospects in this vicinity which will bear investigation.

Dan Burns will be the next U. S. Senator from California. Grant has agreed to quit and throw his strength to Burns if the latter will reimburse him for his election expenses. Dan and his friends are "digging up" and the thing appears settled.

We have received from Senator White a sack of garden seeds which we take pleasure in distributing. A lot will be mailed to-day to farmers in the county and a limited number of packages reserved to be given to those who will take the trouble to call at this office.

While in San Francisco A. W. Eibeshutz purchased an extensive and carefully selected stock of goods which is now arriving. The entire stock will be sold very cheap and in direct competition with San Francisco prices. Before sending away for any article you should call and examine his stock.

Last Wednesday evening Miss Lena Thomtson of Camp Independence and Sheriff A. M. Given were united in marriage by Rev. John J. Pardee. The wedding took place at the home of the bride's parents and was a very quitet one The newly wedded couple have a host of friends who join us in wishing them every happiness. A sample of cake is acknowledged by this office.

O. I. Mairs states that he has used more water up to date for irrigation than at any time in his past experience for the corresponding season. This is good sense. It is manifestly the height of absurdity to let water go to waste in the early spring, let the ground get as dry as a bone and then kick because there is not enough water to go around.

THE WATER QUESTION—3.

When the sturdy English laborer concluded to take a walk through the Park of "My Lord" he was confronted by the Lord asking him by what right he was walking over and through his domain. The laborer answered by asking the question himself. The Lord answered that the land was his. "Who gave it to you?" "My father", answered the Lord. "Who gave it to your father?" "His father." "Who gave it to him?" "Well, he fought for it." Then rolling up his sleeves the laborer answered, "Well, I will fight you for it. Come on." The laborer would probably have gotten the best of the ordinary lord or landed proprietor, and we would soon have quite a general change in the titles to land and other properties if this simple but brutal way was allowed to-day. Fortunately for us we have a different method of procedure to settle or quiet titles to all kinds of property. Our Government is one based on law and order from the smallest community to the largest city, from the least political division to the Nation as a whole. We believe individually and collectively in the rule of the majority even when, as it sometimes happens, the rule of the majority bears very hard upon the minority. In such cases there is always a way open to attain the ends of justice. Among all Anglo-Saxon peoples, agitation of the question at issue results eventually in justice being done. All great and small questions have been answered thus in our Republic, and must continue to be answered thus if we mean to maintain republican institutions. As Burke, the great English orator and statesman, said, "Agitatition is the rousing of the conscience of the Nation." If there is a minority anywhere in these United States suffering through the tyranny of the majority, there are always the two great bulwarks of freedom to appeal through and reach the conscience of the majority, free speech and free press. This water question must be settled in the same way. Slander, ridicule, vituperation, coercion and misrepresentation will not hinder the settlement of a question that is vital to every citizen; and the question will never be settled until it is settled justly and equitably for all. At present we are facing a water famine of the worst kind, such has never been paralled in this section for many years, if ever before. And yet we wait and twiddle our thumbs. There is an old proverb which says, "God helps those who help themselves." We do not have to go outside of the Unted States to discover that other communities have settled bigger problems of water rights and land rights than those which now confront us as a community. One hundred and twenty-two towns and villages in the United States have settled this question of water rights satisfactorily to themselves individually and collectively. To say that we cannot do it is eduivalent to saying that the tail wags the dog instead of the dog wagging the tail. It is time for us to adopt some other principle or lack of principle than that implied in the story of the dog in the manger. We need not wait for the State to give us authority to improve and increase our water supply, when we already possess that right. But this improvement and increase in the water supply can only be done thoroughly and justly to all by united and collective action. The legal rights of the present owners, the prescriptive rights of other users, the rights acquired by custom and usage and the best interests of all the citizens can only be conserved and preserved by united action. We should be in this matter like one big family; the interest of one should be the concern of all. Every merchant, every farmer, every professional man, every bee man, every rancher, every stockman, every miner, every laboring man prospers as the general community prospers. When there is plenty of work and good wages, every one speaks of the good times in prospective and in hand. Reverse the conditions and we have what is called hard times. The family is the nucleus of the community, of the State and of the Nation. But in our business attitude toward each other we reverse this rule. Hence all this turmoil and confusion called trade and commerce, each trying to get the best of the other. What would be thought of the father of a family who who would give his eldest son the privilege of carpeting the hallway and stairway and allow him to ask toll of every other member of the family who passed over the carpet; to the second son the privilege of putting in the water pipes and then charging toll for every drink the other members of the family indulged in; to another the privilege of putting in the firewood and then charging all the others toll for every time they came near the fire; and so on with the lights and the other conveniences found in every well regulated house. Would there not be trouble in such a house in very short order? The community is only a little larger household, and this is especially the case with the vital questions of light, water and sanitary appliances We in the United States are away behind our brethern in England, where the control of municipal and community utilities for all the people is the rule and not the exception, as with us. Can we learn to help ourselves in no other way than by paying toll to a few of our citizens to whom we have given these privileges? Is there no other way out of the desperate position in which we find ourselves? With a loss at present of 53.3—5 per cent of even the present limited supply of water between the division box and the farm of Mr. Robinson and a loss of not less than 106 inches between the head where the north and south branches and the place where the water is turned into the standpipe of the present water works, according to sworn testimony of the Expert in the case of Baxter vs. Gilbert, to so improve on this wastage and loss would not cost very much money if equitably distributed among all the citizens. As it is, no one outside of those having some color of right to use the water will move a hand or give a dollar to improve property that is claimed by other people. The situation at present is as if all the people through their representatives in Sacramento had given a perpetual mortgage on every snow flake and on every drop of water that falls on the water shed embraced in the territory tributary to these little creeks. This is law and the present owners must be sustained by every power of the State of California, and we, as good citizens, must obey this law until such time as the majority see fit, through their representatives chosen at a regular election to change this law and put the whole question of water rights upon a more just and equitable basis than that of private ownership, which has been the bane of California and all the other States after they have passed the pioneer state. But notwithstanding this law we are not estopped from taking the action that any father of a family may adopt after seeing that special privileges to any of his children will eventually work damage to all the other members of the family; and we can, as a big, amiable and sensible family of citizens, take equitable action in the premises and by this united action start our little community on a career of prosperity to which it is now, and will be for some time to come, a stranger. Collective action is the only solution of the water problem before us, and immediate action is necessary if we mean even to ensure our little crops of hay, grain and fruit for the present season.

JOHN J. MCLEAN.

A meeting of all those interested in the waters of Oak Creek was held at the Camp Independence schoolhouse last Saturday. H. D. Gill was hired for three months to clear out the creek channel and eliminate as far as possible all waste as far as the point of division; to construct and put in new boxes and see to it that each farmer gets his equitable share of water. The Fort people are to be congratulated for using good, sound judgment.

A Story of George IV.

In Lady Gregory's newly published reminiscences she says of George IV's trip to Ireland in 1821: "The king arrived after a good passage, during which much goose pie and whisky had been consumed. Word had just come of the death of Napoleon at St. Helena. The story goes that 'Sire, your enemy is dead,' were the words he was greeted with. 'When did she die?' was his response. But the queen was indeed also dead."

IN THE QUICKSANDS.

ELI TAYLOR was a typical frontiersman. His father had been a pioneer and his grandfather had been killed by Indians "away back when Missouri an' Arkansaw belonged to the French," to use his own language.

Whenever Eli Taylor could see the smoke of a neighbor's cabin he became possessed with the idea that the country was getting to be too thickly settled and correspondingly unhealthy, and he bundled his family into one of those huge wagons known as "a prairie schooner" and moved further west.

This he persisted in doing until one day he found himself under the shadow of the Rocky Mountains, and he woke up to the fact that his wife was a broken-down old woman and his daughter Lena and his son Tom "about as big as they was ever goin' to get to be."

Young Tom Taylor had not inherited the gypsy love of change that had distinguished his ancestors. He was a sturdy, sensible fellow and wanted to settle down on a farm, where his mother could live better than she had been doing, and where Lena could have a chance to know more about books, which she had learned to read in some unaccountable way, and of which she was very fond.

And so Eli Taylor in his 50th year settled down to the cultivation of a farm not far from what is now Canyon City, but which was then a cluster of cabins where prospectors rested before going over the mountains to South Park.

Here Eli Taylor and young Tom worked with so much success that within a few years they had a comfortable house and outbuildings, a dozen cows and as many horses, and, greatest of all evidences of prosperity, money laid by for a rainy day.

Lena Taylor, though miles away from the nearest neighbor, was not destined to remain unknown and unappreciated. The fame of her thrift and her beauty was discussed about the campfires of prospectors in the mountains. Many of them had gone a day's journey out of their way to see her, and the general opinion was that the man who made a successful "claim" to her hand would have, by all odds, the finest piece of property in the territory.

It has been said that poverty and suffering are the greatest tests of character, but we are inclined to think that it requires a stronger, nobler nature to withstand a change in the face of sudden prosperity than to meet reversals with philosophy.

Eli Taylor, was prosperous, and with his prosperity vanished his inborn dislike for settled communities. It was he who carried all the farm produce to Canyon City and purchased there such supplies as were needed by his thrifty family.

Had he confined his purchases to these supplies all would have been well, but, unfortunately, he had a chance to gratify his taste for strong drink, and he yielded to it till the passion became his master.

The saloons of the frontier at that time were open gambling dens, "run" by sharpers who plundered without remorse the men they had first made drunk.

One of these places was kept by a man named "Mart" Estel, who had the coveted reputation of wealth and the unenviable reputation of a desperado who had killed a number of men. He always denied being rich, and when questioned about his shooting exploits he would lay his hand on his hip and say, with a chilling laugh:

"You can bet that when Mart Estel finds himself in a tight box he knows how to fix the lock that will let him out."

Estel's saloon become a favorite resort with Eli Taylor, and he not only got drunk there, but the news reached his family that he had fallen into the habit of gambling. The latter report was confirmed by the fact that he no longer accounted for the money he had got from the sale of his produce.

Lena and her brother begged their father to keep away from Canyon City, but, unheeding them and blind to the tears of his invalid wife, he persisted in the course.

And now the son and daughter, who had been so eager to secure a permanent home, expressed an anxiety to move further into the wilderness, but their father became stubborn, saying:

"You made me settle down here and here I'll stay."

When matters were nearing their worst a young man, dressed in the garb of a hunter, but with a refinement of manner that convinced Lena that he was not "an original mountaineer," came to the valley in which the Taylor farm was situated and asked to board there while he hunted and prospected in the neighboring mountains. He gave his name as "George Herron," and as he offered $8 a week for the accommodation and showed a willingness to pay in advance, Mrs. Taylor and Lena agreed to take him in.

George Herron was a handsome and rather a melancholy young man—such a one as must appeal powerfully to the virgin heart and lofty imagination of the frontier girl.

He was away a great deal—often for nights at a time, and when he returned he but seldom brought game, though he always had strange wild flowers for Lena and curious specimens of ores, which he examined with his microscope and acids.

Love is largely a matter of association; it is not, therefore, to be wondered at that Lena grew to watch the mountain trail for the coming of the young hunter, nor that the light of gladness left her expressive face whenever she saw him disappearing in the rocky heights above the valley.

Of late Mart Estel had taken to visiting the valley, but it chanced that he never came there except when George Herron was away.

Eli Taylor had ceased going to Canyon City; indeed, he seemed to have lost all interest in the farm, in his family, and in himself.

Lena and her mother tried to cheer him, and Tom worked harder than ever to make up for his father's losses, but still Eli went about like a man whose heart was broken.

The reason for this melancholy was at length made manifest. One day Mart Estel, accompanied by a stout, florid man of 40 who looked much like himself, came to the farm and held a long consultation with Eli Taylor.

"I have kept it all from my children," said Eli Taylor to Estel and his companion, who was known as "Lawyer Roggs," "but I reckon the best way is to have them in and make a clean breast of it."

"Yes; they might as well know it first as last," said Estel, "and more particularly Lena, for she's got it in her power to square the account."

"How so?" asked Eli.

"Didn't I tell you how when last you was down, and didn't you promise to speak to her about it?' asked Estel.

"I wasn't myself then. I've forgot all about it, and I wish I could forget that I ever came to this settlement," said the distracted man.

"Have your family in and let us talk it over," said Lawyer Roggs, as he drew some papers from his pocket.

Mrs. Taylor, Lena and Tom were called in, and Mart Estel, without any preliminaries, went on to tell how for a year or more Eli Taylor had been getting deeper and deeper into his debt.

"I loaned money and did all I could for Mr. Taylor," said Estel, "and at last, seeing that he could not pay me, I took a mortgage on the farm and the stock. The mortgage is due, and if Mr. Taylor or none of the family ain't able to take it up I'll sell the place or I'll take it for what's due me."

"I don't know anything about law," said Tom Taylor, "and I don't want to know, but I've tried, and so have mother and Lena, to work hard and make a living up to this time. Father had no right to mortgage the farm and the stock, for they are more of my making than of his, and I do not propose to let any man interfere with my rights."

"YOU HAVE MY ANSWER," SAID LENA.

"Ah, my young friend," said Lawyer Roggs, opening one of the papers he held in his hand, "your father has here sworn that he owns this farm and the stock; if he has sworn to what ain't true, why, all Mr. Estel has to do is to apply to the officers of the law in Denver and have him arrested for swindling and perjury."

On hearing this Eli Taylor groaned and his wife covered her face with her thin hands.

"I have no more to say about it," said Tom, going to the door, "only this—that the man who arrests my father will undertake a life job, and the man who carries out our little property must do so by force."

After Tom had gone Lena asked:

"Mr. Estel, can't you give us time to pay you? Father got only arm at your place. He was not a drunkard nor a gambler before we came here."

"And I didn't make him one or the other," said Estel. "But I told him before what I tell you now—that is, that you can say one word that'll free him from debt and make yourself rich."

"What is that?" asked Lena, with forced calmness.

"Be my wife," said Estel, reaching out his hand.

Lena drew back and the color fled her face. Her simple life had made her unconventional, so that she spoke her mind without any thought of the consequences.

"Marry you?" she said. "How could I do so when I do not love you?"

"But you will learn to love me," said Estel.

"That is impossible."

"Why so?"

"Because I love another."

"Who is he?"

"That matters not," she said, with spirit, "you have my answer."

"But I will not take 'no' for an answer. Think over what I have said, and in one week I shall return; should you then refuse me I shall take what is mine."

With this ultimatum Estel and his friend left.

Eli Taylor and his wife tried to make Lena see that it would be to the advantage of all if she accepted Estel's proposal, but she firmly replied:

"I am ready to die to save either my father or my mother, but it is too much to ask me to sell my soul."

Tom stoutly took his sister's side, and when George Herron returned, which he did that evening, they told him all that had happened and asked his advice.

"I can help you by giving you the money," replied the young hunter, "but my belief is that these fellows are thieves and are playing a bluff game; if so, I think Tom and I can match them."

"It's this young Herron that Lena's in love with," said Eli Taylor to his wife. "If it wasn't for him she'd have Estel and we could keep the place. I won't have him about here no longer."

In his blunt way the old man told George Herron to leave, frankly explaining the reason, and George said in reply:

"If I cannot help you, Mr. Taylor, I will not stay in your way."

The next evening, after a long talk with Lena and her brother, the young hunter shouldered his rifle and went away, and Eli Taylor felt that his property would be now secure, in which event he compromised with his selfishness by promising himself that he would never get drunk nor gamble again.

At length the dreaded day came, and with it Estel, Roggs and a number of men they had brought to take possession of the place.

They found Lena even more determined than before, for she positively refused to speak to Estel in the house.

"Will you speak to me outside?" he asked.

"Yes; on the bridge over Quicksand Creek," she replied. This was the bridge on the road leading from the farm to Canyon City, and the stream which it spanned was filled with the quicksand that makes traveling in that region such a terror.

Fearing some harm, Estel's friends followed at a distance, and the moment he stood on the bridge with Lena they saw a young man in hunter's garb appear at the other end. They heard this young man cry out: "We meet at last, Belman!"

Estel seemed frozen with terror; after a few seconds he laid his hand on the bridge railing and leaped over, his object being escape, but he found himself in the remorseless grasp of the quicksands.

Roggs and others ran up only to see Estel or "Belman," for these were only a few of his names, disappearing.

"That wretch," said George Herron, pointing to the stream, "murdered and robbed my father two years ago in Salt Lake City. I have been looking for him ever since, but I hold you to witness that he died by his own act." With their champion gone Roggs and his companions had no further interest in his case. Eli Taylor was never troubled again. He changed his habits and made over his farm to his son, though he thinks that his son-in-law, George Herron, is quite as fine a fellow as Tom.—New York Ledger.

Ancient Symbolism of the Glove.

In the history of dress the position of the glove is unique. There was a time when the glove was an emblem of confidence. Forming a part of the regal habit, it became a badge of rank. In the Middle Ages the ceremony of investiture in conferring dignities or bestowing lands was consummated by the giving of a glove. Likewise, the deprivation of gloves was a ceremony of degradation. Then, too, it was the custom to give gloves in payment of rent, the gloves being accepted as a guarantee of a retainer's service, which was the chief condition of tenure. On the Scotch border the glove held a high place as a gage. Here a glove borne on the point of a lance proclaimed an act of perfidy. Biting the glove was a sign of hostile intent and the usual prelude to a quarrel. Throughout the history of dress they are found symbolical of pledges, gages, gifts or favors. Gloves also form part of burial rites, and were carried in funeral processions until the middle of the eighteenth century. When a maiden died it was the custom to place in the center of the garland which was borne on her coffin a pair of white gloves—a symbol of virginity and innocence.—Woman's Home Companion.

Cabby's Revenge.

A stipendiary magistrate in a town in Yorkshire who was not given to err on the side of leniency once had before him a cab driver who was charged with furious driving. After some severe comments on the man's conduct a heavy fine was imposed.

A few days after the trial the magistrate, who had been detained rather longer than usual in the court, was hurrying along to catch his train, when, seeing an empty cab handy, he hailed the driver and directed him to proceed to the station, telling him that he was pressed for time. The driver, however, heedless of the hint, kept to a very gentle trot.

"I say, I say, my man," exclaimed the fare, with his head out of the window, "drive faster than this."

"It can't be done, sir," replied the driver. "Ye see, if we drives faster we're had up afore the beak, and we gets fined; so we has to be careful."

He did not alter his pace and neither did the "beak" catch his train.—London Tid-Bits.

Feathered Surgeons.

Some interesting observations on the treatment of wounds of birds have been made by a writer who tells of a snipe both of whose legs he had unfortunately broken by a misdirected shot. He recovered the bird only the next day, when he discovered that the poor thing had contrived to apply a dressing of down and a sort of splint to each leg. A ligature of grass had been used to wind many times around the wounded parts, and was securely fastened by coagulated blood. Twice the writer has brought home snipe with interwoven feathers strapped on one or the other leg, which undoubtedly had been broken.

NO STOVES IN KOREA.

Instead Flues Are Laid Under the Floors, Which Are Thus Heated.

Stoves are not used to any extent by the native Koreans. The Korean method of heating is excellently adapted to their resources and conditions. In building their houses they lay down a system of flues where the floor is to be. These flues begin at a fireplace, which is usually placed in an outer shed or connecting closed alleyway.

From this fireplace the flues extend in a more or less curved direction, like the ribs of a round fan, to a trench at the rear of the room, which in turn opens into a chimney, which is usually placed some distance from the house. Flat flagstones are then placed carefully over these flues, and the whole is cemented over and finally covered with a thick oil paper, for which the country is noted. This paper keeps smoke from entering the room, and a little straw or brushwood, used in the fireplace for cooking the rice, serves to heat the stone floor and gives an agreeable warmth, which lasts till the time of the next meal.

Two heatings daily tend to give the people a nice warm floor, upon which they sit in the daytime and sleep at night. By leaving their shoes at the door the inmates preserve the paper floor, which from constant polishing takes on a rich brown color.—New York Press.

Feeding Hotel Help.

The first work done in the Waldorf-Astoria, New York, each day is the preparation of breakfast for 1,200 employees. The last of these meals is served usually before the earliest rising guest sleepily orders his eggs and coffee, thinking himself almost a hero to be breakfasting at such an hour.

MRS. PINKHAM'S ADVICE.

What Mrs. Nell Hurst has to Say About It.

DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—When I wrote to you I had not been well for five years; had doctored all the time but got no better. I had womb trouble very bad. My womb pressed backward, causing piles. I was in such misery I could scarcely walk across the floor. Menstruation was irregular and too profuse, was also troubled with leucorrhœa. I had given up all hopes of getting well; everybody thought I had consumption. After taking five bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, I felt very much better and was able to do nearly all my own work. I continued the use of your medicine, and feel that I owe my recovery to you. I cannot thank you enough for your advice and your wonderful medicine. Any one doubting my statement may write to me and I will gladly answer all inquiries.—MRS. NELL HURST, Deepwater, Mo.

Letters like the foregoing, constantly being received, contribute not a little to the satisfaction felt by Mrs. Pinkham that her medicine and counsel are assisting women to bear their heavy burdens.

Mrs. Pinkham's address is Lynn, Mass. All suffering women are invited to write to her for advice, which will be given without charge. It is an experienced woman's advice to women.

BEFORE THE DAY.

We wakened at the dawning, but we never saw the day;
And we spoke our little prologue, but we never reached the play.
Oh! our love was sweet and certain till gray sorrow dropt the curtain.
Ay, we wakened at the dawning, but we never saw the day.

There were buds within our garden, but they never came to flower;
There were birds among our bushes, but they only sang an hour,
And we laughed to see the swallow, but the summer did not follow;
There were buds within our garden, but they never came to flower.

'Tis a garment white and silken, 'tis a white and misty veil,
'Tis a pair of little slippers—O dear love!
—so white and frail.
Is the manhood in me dying that I'm sitting here and crying
O'er a garment and a slipper and a never-opened veil?

Dear, the world is empty—empty as the gemless golden band.
The token I had fingered and that never found your hand.
They've been telling me the story of an everlasting glory;
But you were the only preacher I could ever understand.

Ah, we wakened at the dawning, but we never saw the day;
And we spoke our little prologue, but we never reached the play.
But our love was sweet and certain till gray Sorrow dropt the curtain.
Hark! a single bell is calling . . . and this should have been the day.
—Waverley.

THE MISER'S HOARD.

HAVE you ever strolled in the quaint old city of San Antonio to where the river cuts like a steel knife blade through the hills? It runs in a rift between the hills, as if nature had carved its course in the dark, and tangled it all up, like a silver-blue ribbon in the forest of mesquite fringe.

Have you ever followed its windings and looked upon the haunted house standing high above the river's brim, and seen, dark upon its moldering walls, the print of a bloody hand?

No? Then I will tell you the story; it happened many years ago.

It was New Year's Eve, and a raw wind swept through the clefts between the hills and dashed the spray of the San Antonio River in a monotonous swish against the steep, overhanging bank. What with the rush of the wind through the trees and the beat of the turbulent waves, minor sounds were swallowed in the general discord of nature.

On the bridge spanning the river stood Pitro and Juan Tasca, their sombreros drawn low over their faces, their throats muffled to keep off the cutting wind. Pitro dashed his hand against the bridge rail and cried:

"I tell you, Juan, if Raschal Quito were not the old miser's only heir, he should never marry my daughter. A proud, lazy, trifling——"

Pitro caught his breath sharply as the sound of a cry, shrill and far away, floated down the river.

"What is that?" he cried, grasping Tasca's arm. "Some one cried as if in death agony."

Tasca drew his muffler down from one ear.

"I hear nothing," he said. "It was the cry of a panther you heard, no doubt. You are excited enough to hear anything."

"Perhaps," assented Pitro, "yet it seemed to me there was something in the cry I recognized."

Tasca moved forward.

"You were talking of young Quito," he said. "Yes, the boy is wild—apparently trifling—but there is an element of good about him. The way that old uncle of his treats him is enough to drive the energy out of any spirited young fellow; he has never had a chance to show what is in him, good or bad. Now, there was the time——"

"I want to hear no praise of a Quito," interrupted Pitro, harshly. "Here my daughter might have made a fine match with Senor Rocca; true, a little old for so lovely a girl, but a man of standing—of wealth! Yet, what can I say? Who knows what sums of gold that old man Quito has hidden? One cannot overlook that. And when Monita throws her arms about my neck and vows that she will marry no one but Raschal, only Raschal, what can I say? She is my only one, my little Monita."

"No fairer, sweeter child ever blessed a father's home," added Tasca.

They were over the bridge now and nearing Pitro's home. From a different direction—who may say just when?—a tall young figure had left that home.

"Good-night, Monita mia," he had said, folding his beautiful fiancee in his arms; "you will not have long to wait. If my uncle will not support me in decency, nor allow me to support myself, we will marry anyhow. I have a plan, and I will not tarry long in accomplishing it."

Monita's soft, dusky eyes flashed a love-light up into his face; her red lips closed like a rosebud.

"I will never marry any one but you," she cried; "it is only you I love."

With these words ringing in his ears Raschal drew his cloak about him and disappeared in the gloom of the mesquite shadows.

Some distance down the river Miser Quito, as he was called, sat muttering in his home. The fire was bright that warmed him; he did not have to spend money for fuel; the room was comfortable; his family had been well to do; all that they left was his.

"Why does that wretched boy stay so late?" he muttered. "Always anxious to leave me, when any one might come in this lonely place and rob me. Always anxious to work for his living—pah! as if I could trust a hireling to protect me as Raschal's presence does. Ah, I will make him suffer for this delay, wretch that he is to leave me thus alone!"

A heavy step sounded on the stair outside, and the door was pushed open as the old man unbolted it, and a tall, cloaked figure, stepped into the room.

What followed during a bitter altercation belated passers-by who heard the raised voices could not say. Was not Miser Quito forever quarreling with Raschal, and now that he had forbidden Raschal to marry, was not the quarreling likely to be worse than ever?

* * * * * * * *

It was in the gray light of New Year's morning that Marco, the woodcutter, looked up as he passed Miser Quito's house and saw the print of a bloody hand on the wall beside the door. Marco grew pale through his swarthy skin. Bloody deeds were not uncommon sights about San Antonio. Marco had no horror of them. But who ever saw a seal like that upon the wall of a man's home? Marco turned with a sudden weakness in his knees and hurried back to town.

Among the rush of people who hastened past Marco on his return to the Quito house were Tasca and Pitro. As if answering an unspoken accusation, Tasca turned at the door, crying:

"This is not the mark of Raschal's hand; the fingers are too short and broad for his."

No one noticed him as the crowd pushed its way into the miser's living room and looked down with a sort of horror upon the battered remains of the old miser lying in a pool of blood. The old man's nephew had many more enemies than friends, and from them burst a cry like the yelp of bloodhounds upon a murderer's track—

"Raschal!"

They scattered in every direction in a self-instituted search for the murderer. He was nowhere on the premises and their search here only revealed the fact that the old man had been robbed as well as murdered.

Monita lay sleeping through the early morning hours, the fringe of her long lashes lay on the rounded flush of her cheeks, and blotted out that crimson shadow that had fallen with the New Year dawn upon her life.

Of all San Antonio she was the only one who did not go to look at the print of the crimson hand. Of all San Antonio Tasca was the only man who could not see that the contour of the red palm and blood dripping fingers was that of Raschal Quito.

The next day Miser Quito was buried in his own grounds, for no money could be found for burial elsewhere, and the expense that the town went to was paid out of the sale of some of his handsome effects. They were sold for a mere trifle, for, the people said, "Raschal will never come back to be hanged," and they did not scruple to make good such a chance for acquiring the heirlooms of the Quito family, though Miser Quito's avarice had not left any too many for sale.

The hunt for Raschal was savage but fruitless and at last was given up.

"He must have drowned himself," the people said; "perhaps when the river is low in the fall we may find his bones."

"You remember that cry?" asked Pitro of Tasca; "at first I thought it was old Quito's voice; now I know it was that of Raschal as he plunged into the river."

"Perhaps," assented Tasca.

The miser's house was locked, and time wore on until the wild flowers of Texas made a coverlet of blue and gold over old Quito's grave, and the mark of the crimson grew less vivid in hue.

Monita clung to the belief that Raschal was innocent; that he would send for her some day when it was safe for him to do so, and she never questioned her intent to go when the time came. Tasca alone learned her belief, and it was wonderful how, after Tasca had assured her that it was also his own, she bloomed again into the lovely, merry maiden she had been before this tragedy had swept across her life. The roses came back to her cheeks, and she no longer refused to see her friends. But she grew quiet and staid as year after year went by without a sign from Raschal; and the people talked about the voices heard at night in the Quito house, and every New Year's Eve along the river side there rang a muffled cry which chilled the blood in the veins of the hearers and hurried them away from the haunted stream. Time never hushed these cries; years never wiped away the imprint of the scarlet hand beside the door, nor turned the love of the beautiful Monita into another course.

* * * * * * * *

It was Christmastide, and as they filed into the open door of San Fernando a man waiting beside it stepped forward at the approach of Juan Tasca and said:

"You are Sheriff Tasca?"

"Yes."

"You are wanted at once to take the deposition of a dying man."

"That is not my business," began Tasca.

"No matter," urged the latter; "he says you are the only friend Raschal Quito had, and——"

"I will come," cried Tasca, growing white at the sudden thought of Raschal within reach, living!

He hurried the man on his way till he paused at the door of a ranchman's house on the outskirts of the town, Fritz Van Meister, a man of unsocial habits, but not lacking friends.

"Here?" cried Tasca, as he followed his guide into the house.

"Yes, here."

The man ushered him into Van Meister's room and pointed to the form upon the bed.

The shock of seeing the unexpected rendered Tasca dumb.

"I am dying," moaned Van Meister: "I must confess. The priest has shrived me—but you are Raschal's friend—I murdered his old uncle. He does not know it."

"What!" yelled Tasca, with a tiger-like jump toward the bed.

The dying man cowered.

"Yes, I killed him, but I never meant to. He owed me money and refused to pay it. That night he was alone. I threatened him—I struck him—and—he fell dead at my feet. You know how I crushed him. I took all the money I found—not much, for he had hidden his wealth well. When I got out into the fresh air I grew weak to think what I had done. I leaned against the wall to keep from falling. I heard the sound of Raschal's voice humming a love song—I hear it now—also old Quito's cry when he fell. I ran down stairs and hid in their shadow as Raschal passed me and went up. I heard him cry out:

"'Nobody will believe I did not do it. They will hang me without shrift. Oh, Monita, must I leave you?'

"I heard no more. Those words steadied my brain. I went home no longer fearing the brand of the murderer, safe to live on with my family. Now," he ended, spent with the exertion of his recital, "I am ready to die."

Tasca looked at the men who had followed him into the room.

"You heard all?"

"All," they responded.

"Then help me to find Raschal," he said, and left the house without a backward look at the man who had wrought so much evil.

It was strange to find how many men saw excuses for Raschal's unsociability in the past. He was tied to a miser—how could he find time or money for friends or society? They remembered it was pity that kept Raschal near the miser. They remembered his kindnesses. What a welcome they gave him when he returned before a week, a man with a resolute face, his black hair threaded with gray, with a comfortable business in another State, where he had assumed a name and prospered.

If Monita was not in the first flower of her youth, she was in the full bloom of her beauty, and it was a right royal wedding they had, while the plaza round the church was gay with a joyous crowd.

Raschal unearthed his uncle's treasure; but to this day you may see, high above the brim of the river, the decaying walls of the haunted house, whose door is sealed with the imprint of a crimson hand.—Waverly Magazine.

MAKING PEARLS TO ORDER.

Mussel and Oyster Being Domesticated and Taught the Jewelry Business.

Diamonds, rubies, emeralds and sapphires have all been produced in the laboratory, and it is now the turn of the pearl, says the New York Times. The chemist, however, is not himself the maker of the new artificial pearls; he is only the collaborator. It is true that false pearls are made from mother-of-pearl, but their luster is not up to the mark. The Chinese have long introduced grains of sand and little knots of wire into the shell of the pearl oyster in order that the animal, to relieve itself from the irritation so caused, may coat the foreign substance with pearl. If this matter be inserted between the shell and the mantle the oyster can eject it by contractions of his body. To prevent this M. Boutan, a French experimenter, has trepanned the shell and introduced a small bead of nacre, which might, however, be a true pearl of a small size, through the hole, and fixed it by means of cement to the shell. This bean was in course of time covered with nacre by the oyster, and a fine large pearl was the result. Dealers cannot distinguish it from an Orient pearl. The question of making pearls in this way was recently discussed at a meeting of the Academies des Sciences, Paris, and M. Berthelot, the famous chemist, observed that such a pearl could only be considered a true pearl if it had at least a hundred layers of the pearl nacre; otherwise it would only be a foreign substance covered with nacre. Of course, if the foreign matter is a pearl itself this objection disappears, and we have the means of producing pearls at will. According to M. Lacaze Duthier, some two years would be required for a hallotide to produce a big pearl. The artificial pearl of the trade, fabricated from nacre, could also be coated in the same way. Evidently the pearl mussel and oyster are about to be domesticated for the production of pearls, as the spider is for silk. Pearl divers may become a legend of the past.

How Insects Hide.

How many have ever noticed the skillful way in which many insects disguise themselves when in danger from some larger animal or bird? Probably you have all observed that the caterpillar "plays dead" when he is disturbed and that many insects choose for their homes some tree or shrub whose bark or foliage match themselves in color.

There is a certain variety of moth, quite common around elms, which fixes its wings so that they closely resemble spots or lichens on the bark of the tree and can only be detected by a trained eye. Another moth, whose principal colors are pink and yellow, arranges itself on the blossom of a primrose, so as to wholly escape notice. In the East Indian islands there is a spider which reposes on the upper side of a large leaf in such a shape that it perfectly resembles decayed matter.

A hunter in tropical regions tells of seeing a cricket pursued around the trunk of a tree by a lizard. Suddenly the insect settled itself in a small depression, in the bark, spread out its wings slightly and flattened itself so that the lizard actually crawled over it and went away without ever knowing what had become of it.

COMPRESSED AIR MOTORS.

New Motive Power for the New York Street Railroads.

Compressed air is soon to be added to the motive powers of the street railroads in New York. The adoption of this new propelling force is to begin on the 28th and 29th street lines, operated by the Metropolitan Street Railway Company. Twenty compressed air cars are now nearing completion for these lines.

Experiments have been made for several years with a new application of compressed air, bringing results in practical fields, the promoters contend, as certain as electricity and much safer, more economical, and more easily controlled than the mysterious fluid, steam, or cable. These tests, they say, have shown beyond the shadow of a doubt that a locomotive stored with the air can draw a regulation train of cars from Jersey City to Philadelphia at an even speed of seventy miles an hour without the recharging of the chambers.

Its advantages over the steam locomotive are said to be economy, cleanliness, retention of power, and the even and regular manner in which this power is freed. With the same charge it is just as easy to run the compressed air engine sixty miles an hour as it is to run it twenty miles for three hours, and the time in which the distance is to be covered is only limited by the character of the roadbed.

COMPRESSED AIR MOTOR.

MAINE GUM GATHERERS.

The Spruce Which Brings Big Prices in the City.

Some of the druggists in Eastern Maine have made contracts for spruce gum aggregating several thousands of dollars, and some have outfitted gum hunters and sent them away to the woods, as backers send men to the Klondike, says the Lewiston (Me.) Journal. Year by year the gum pickers are obliged to go further into the woods. The quality of the gum must be kept up. Most of the Maine gum is sent away to the city market that demands for consumption by the society girls in their boudoirs the round red lumps that gleam with inner fires like the bloodstone. This sort of gum is sold readily by the Maine wholesalers at $1.50 per pound. Between you and me, the metropolitan prices for this tip-top gum are so alluring to the Maine sellers that we provincials do not get it unless we go out into the wildwoods and dig it for ourselves. The only peculiarly favored mortals in this respect are the Maine girls who have best fellows in the woods.

Compared with his expenses, the wages of the gum picker are almost Klondike prices. A few bushels of beans and some flour furnish him his winter's food. Frequently he gets gum in one day that will net him $10 in the market. But the gum picker isn't apt to be a very energetic chap. He makes short days and goes fishing and gunning about half of the time. He doesn't leave the side of his cozy campfire when a storm is on. And at the end of the season, when he comes out in the spring with his pack of gum on his back, it will be found that he has made but little more than day's wages.

AN OPTICAL DELUSION.

How the Eye May Be Deceived by Peculiarly Organized Cubes.

How many cubes are there in the lower figure? Six or seven? Six, you say? Look sharp at the two black squares at the bottom. Now there are seven! No, six!

This funny illusion is used by Professor Jastrow in his article on "The

AN OPTICAL DELUSION.

Mind's Eye," in the Popular Science Monthly. The smaller figures above the main one are guides. Look at the left-hand one and then glance down, and the larger figure always seems to contain six cubes. Look from the right-hand one down and you always see seven.

Great Catalogue of Birds.

Begun twenty-five years ago, the British museum catalogue of birds has just been completed in twenty-seven large volumes. It attempts to give a list of every kind of bird known at the time of publication, and describes 11,614 species, belonging to 2,255 genera and 124 families; 400,000 specimens, 350,000 of which are in the British museum collection, are referred to in the work.

It is regarded as perfectly legitimate by some men to rob a stranger.

YESTERDAY AND TOMORROW MEET IN UNCLE SAM'S DOMAIN.

TODAY IS TOMORROW IN MANILA.

Paradox of Time Leads to All Sorts of Queer Consequences.

The war with Spain has been full of surprises, but perhaps its oddest outcome is that Uncle Sam now has all his holidays—not to mention other days—in duplicate. For this we have to thank Admiral Dewey. Territorial expansion has involved us in time expansion also. It is a curiously literal fulfillment of the Spaniard's dream of "manana." To-day is always to-morrow in the Philippines. This paradox of time leads to all sorts of queer consequences. The cablegrams received to-day are dated to-morrow. Only the breaking of the cable at Manila prevented our hearing of Dewey's victory the day before the battle was fought! If you should start at noon to-day and travel westward at the rate of about a thousand miles an hour, it would still be noon in every region you passed through all the way around the world. You would catch no glimpse of night; you would see no sunset and no sunrise. Yet when you reached home again, twenty-four hours later, it would be to-morrow. Proceeding in the opposite direction, you would, of course, get just the opposite result. You would gain a day, apparently.

The day of the month is a purely arbitrary arrangement. Nature does not define it. One day slides into another just as yarn goes round the reel. Yet it is necessary to make the change somewhere. So we draw an arbitrary line from north to south, on the one side of which it is to-day and on the other to-morrow, even in places not a mile apart. Theoretically there are points where a single step would carry you from Sunday noon into the middle of Monday. This is the so-called date line. Here all ships as they cross drop or repeat a day, throwing your diary sadly out of gear. Sailing eastward you go to bed Sunday evening, and when you rise in the morning it is still Sunday. Sailing toward the west, you find that you have slept till Tuesday, though you got only your usual rest. The true date line is rarely shown on maps. The accompanying chart is therefore worth preserving.

Roughly, the course of the line is as follows: Starting at the north pole it passes through Behring strait, then slants to the westward to clear the long horn formed by the Aleutian chain of islands and give them the same day as the United States, to which they belong. This accomplished, it returns to the one hundredth and eightieth meridian and drops southward into the tropics, keeping far to the east of the Japanese group and the Philippines, until it approaches the latitude of the Fiji Islands. As these and some neighboring groups belong to Great Britain and do business chiefly with her Australian colonies, the date line here makes a sudden swerve eastward, so as not to embarrass the local commerce with a change of day. When we purchased Alaska we annexed the Siberian day, which at that time cut into the American continent, though occupying a remote and desolate region. We quickly revised the date line, however, to suit our own convenience.

The case of the Philippines is singular. For a long time they enjoyed the American day, though the Asiatic calendar prevailed all around them, thus dragging the date line far out of its natural course. Some who ought to know better seem to suppose that this absurd practice is still maintained. A statement to that effect appeared in a well-known magazine not many years ago. But in 1844 the much-needed change was made by Narciso Claveria, then Governor General and Archbishop, the 31st of December of that year being dropped from the calendar.

Curious Devices.

To produce sleep by the aid of machinery is among the newest ideas. Sleep will sometimes result from fatigue of the eyes. Looking at trees or other objects as we rush along in the train will frequently "send us off." An ingenious gentleman has produced a machine for this purpose. It is a box surmounted by two fan-like panels, one above the other, revolving horizontally in opposite directions. These panels are studded with mirrors that throw upon the retina a vibrating flood of twinkling light. A similar effect is produced by staring at a bright ball placed high above the head, so that some slight strain is caused by staring at it. Another apparatus for causing drowsiness is formed of clamps for squeezing the arteries leading to the brain. The clamps remain in position for less than half a minute, and by that time the sufferer from insomnia has been placed in a state of somnolence by the decreased flow of blood to the brain. Still another method is to arrange an elastic battery in the bed so that a mild electric current acts upon the spine.

AN EAST INDIAN PENITENT.

Carries About with Him Six Hundred Seventy-two Pounds of Chains.

Hindoo fakirs subject themselves to all sorts of flesh mortification. One of them finds joy in weighing his body down with iron chains. He carries 672 pounds of metal in this way, and looks as if he would have a hard time running for a cable car or dodging an electric cab. The wearer of these chains is Abdul bin Abdulla, a mystic of Bombay. A Mohammedan fakir years ago taught him that to obtain occult power he should mortify the flesh and he began by wearing an iron ring around his neck. To this from time to time he attached chains until he accumulated his present collection. He is 60 years old. The chains are worn night and day and they are firmly welded to the neck, arms and ankles. He expects to carry 1,500 pounds before he dies.

CRETE'S NEW FLAG.

The Powers Decide on a Design for a National Ensign.

The powers have now decided on the design the Cretan flag shall take. The ground of the flag will be blue, quartered by a white cross. The upper quarter next the staff will, however, be red, bearing a five-pointed star. The flag is a pretty one, but it cannot be said to have given entire satisfaction to all over whom it will float. A section of the Cretans grumble that the flag does not sufficiently recognize the Ottoman suzerainty.

It is safe to wager that a man who wears kid gloves on the streets every day is either in love or a preacher.

WORLD'S STRANGEST BRIDGE.

It Is Built of Vines Over the Omo River in Abyssinia.

Many and strange were the things seen by the French expedition of Bonvalot de Bonchamps in Africa, but nothing stranger than the bridge of vines over the Omo River, in Abyssinia, which is pictured in "L'Illustration" from a photograph taken by a member of the party. In most parts of Africa bridges are undreamed of; big rivers are crossed by rafts and little ones forded. But in the mountains of Abyssinia the torrents that pour down to join the Nile are not so lightly stemmed. Over one of these the Abyssinians, who have something like a settled country and stable government, have thrown the bridge. Unlike the Brooklyn bridge or the suspension bridge at Niagara, these Abyssinian engineers had no cables, no scientific bands of steel. Instead they had only nature's force. But ingenuity succeeded in the absence of other resource.

It is built upon the suspension plan, hung from big cables made of twisted creepers; from these depend the uprights bearing the floor supports. The roadway is very narrow, for no one ever travels across the hills except with caravans of porters bearing trade gods. The skill with which the bridge is built is something marvelous. The Bonvalot de Bonchamps party set out from Djibouti, on the Red Sea, and traveled across the Somali desert and the Abyssinian hills to join Marchand at Fashoda, which he reached from the west coast. Thus they planned to throw a strip of French soil right across the dark continent. It reached the head waters of the Sobat and went boating merrily down the river; but meanwhile the British gunboats reached the junction of the Sobat with the White Nile and the expedition is now toiling back to Djibouti. The road going out is a good deal longer than it was going in.

MARKED WITH BRAND OF CAIN.

Michigan Palmist Says Hands of Murderers Contain Proof of Guilt.

Does the murderer bear the mark of crime in his hand? A palmist of Detroit, Mich., says yes, without equivocation. It is a peculiar, almost triangular mark in the middle of the palm, connected with what palmists call the heart line. He took casts of the hands of Adolph Luetgert, convicted of murdering his wife in Chicago, and of Theodore Durrant, who was executed for the murder of two young women in San Francisco. In both of these he found the murderer's mark distinctly traced, and he has found it in other hands. He said:

"Let the police authorities provide half a dozen criminals, one of whom shall be a convicted murderer—only he must be guilty beyond all question—and submit the hands for my scrutiny. I do not ask to see the faces and figures of these criminals; only their hands. I will pick out the murderer's hand from the lot."

Mortuary Relic.

Mrs. Helen Struthers Dunn, of No. 723 Pine street, Philadelphia, is the owner of a curious relic, which is nothing less than a locket made from the coffin of George Washington. It came to Mrs. Dunn through her father, John Struthers, who gave to the United States the sarcophagus in which Washington's body now rests. When the coffin containing the body of the great American was being removed to Mount Vernon a little piece of it was chipped off, polished, then set in gold and fashioned into the strange ornament, which is itself coffin-shaped. Instead of a name-plate there is a little piece of glass, and beneath this rests a lock of hair said to be taken from the head of the famous revolutionary leader. This relic and the trowel that was used to cement the sarcophagus lie side by side in Mrs. Dunn's treasure drawer.

It's a pity that death doesn't transfer its affections from a shining mark to the mining shark.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

IRV. H. MULHOLLAND.

ISSUED EVERY FRIDAY.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.,

FRIDAY, MARCH 24 1899

The California legislature adjourned without electing a United States Senator. This is an era of great importance to this Coast and we have but one representative in the upper house. The majority of the people of this State have only themselves to blame.

Eight millionaires have this year been elected to the United States Senate and there are yet to be heard from California, Delaware and Pensylvania. Burns and Grant are both reputed to be men of wealth, but they are not in the same class wit\ Clark of Montana and Depew. If tney had been, possibly the Sacramento dead lock would have been broken before this.

The Greast Register is now a back number. The new law substitutes for it the affidavits of voters themselves given at the time of registration. These are to be bound together for use at the precincts where affiants cast their votes. It is presumed that the signature of the voter to the affidavit will furnish the best means of identification in doubtful cases. But how about the ignorant voters who cannot sign their names?

SENATOR WHITE.

In these days of partizan clamor and turmoil it is most gratifying to find a man in public life of a character so upright, and with steadfastness of purpose so strong and true that he rises so far above partizan strife that his strongest political opponents delight to do him honor. Such a man is indeed a states man, when party bigotry attaches no taint to him. The following extracts are from the three leading Republican papers of the State

The State of California has never had a more loyal, able or conscientious Senator than Hon. Stephen M White. While he exercised a potent influence upon national affairs, during his term in the Senate, he also devoted himself assiduously to the promotion of the interests of California. In all matters affecting this State, Senator white was always to be found advocating measures calculated to benefit his constituents, and the entire commonwealth owes him a debt of gratitude for his courageous and able efforts in behalf of the public weal. The people of Southern California, in particular, have reason to be profoundly grateful to Senator White for the thoroughness and zeal with which he invariably championed their interests throughout the entire period of his term in the Senate.—Los Angeles Times.

Men like Stephen M. White are not so numerous in our public life as to pass without comment. Democrats and Republicans heartily join in wishing there were more men of that order in high places. The Senator's reception here last night is witness to the welcome that awaits a man who has the courage of his convictions. It is well to compare the esteem in which he is held with the perfunctory feeling for many another man who has steered a more popular course Senator White's attitude on national issues has been at times sharply at varience with popular clamor. He opposed the war when the whole country was tugging at the leash; he opposed imperialism when enthusiasm for expansion was at full tide. In doing so, however, he has strengthened, not weakened, the faith California placed in him, and rose, a young man, to an enviable seat in the Senate. Why? Because he has been genuine. He has mapped out a course and followed it—not veered with every gust of oratory nor with every sudden current of feeling. Time may prove him right or it may prove him wrong; but he is already proved of the stuff this country must rely on henceforth as it has in the past. Creatures of compromise do not stand conspicuous in America's annals. A Senator may compromise on matters of expediency, but not with honor and glory on matters of principle. If he does, he will not have enemies to applaud or oppose him, nor friends to cherish him. Senator White's great ability carries him far, but it is his sincerity and his courage that lift him up to the position of a true statesmen.—Los Angeles Express.

Men of all parties will approve the action of Governor Gage in appointing Senator Stephen M. White to the office of Regent of the university. The selection is an excellent one in every respect. It is in no sense a partizan reward, since Senator White is not only a Democrat, but was one of the most active of his party in the campaign against Governor Gage in the last campaign. It gives the southern part of the State a strong representative on the university board, and is thus as satisfactory from a geographical as from political considerations. While the Governor could have readily found a man in his own party and a resident of this section of the State well fitted to perform the duties imposed upon the regents of the university, it is none the less gratifying that he made the choice he did, for such appointments should be free not only from political bias, but from even the suspicion of it. None will question the fitness of the selection made. Senator White is one of the few political leaders of the State who rank as statesmen and have the esteem of the whole people without respect to party lines. His abilities are of the first order and his patriotic regard for the welfare of the State and of its institutions is undoubted. Himself a man of learning and culture, he will be in full sympathy with the work to which he has been called, and can be counted on to labor faithfully for the accomplishmnnt of all its great educational objects.—S. F. Call.

Sydney Smith's Prescription.

The late Henry Reeve, C. B., D. C. L., for many years leader writer of the London Times and until his death editor of the Edinburgh Review, has narrated much amusing gossip of the celebrities of his acquaintance in his "Memoirs and Correspondence." The book contains one great rarity—a new story of Sydney Smith.

Mr. Reeve was dining one night at a house where the other distinguished guests included Macaulay and Sydney Smith. Macaulay was at that time laying society waste with his waterspouts of talk. People in his company were always bursting for want of an opportunity of dropping a word, and this was not an exceptional occasion.

At length, dinner being over, Sydney Smith, Reeve and a few others went away by themselves, and immediately got on the overpowering subject of Macaulay.

"He confounds soliloquy and colloquy," said Reeve.

"He is a book in breeches," Smith declared.

"The very worst feature in Macaulay's character is his appalling memory," said Reeve.

"Aye, indeed," said Sydney Smith. "Why, he could repeat the whole 'History of the Virtuous Bluecoat Boy,' in three volumes, post 8vo, without a slip."

After a pause, as if of consideration, the witty divine added, "He should take two tablespoonfuls of the waters of Lethe every morning to correct his retentive powers."

Cheap Living.

Government experts say that a man can be well fed for 35 cents a day This, however, means feeding men in mass. There is a man in Philadelphia, however, who laughs at this lavish expenditure, inasmuch as his bill of fare for the entire week only costs that amount. Twenty years ago he made up his mind that Americans ate too much. His staple meal is in the middle of the day, and it always consists of soup—good, rich soup—and a baked potato. Some days instead of the baked potato he has what southerners call cowpeas, which are extremely cheap and wholesome. They cost 5 cents a pound and swell very much in cooking. He cooks them with a bit of salt pork. Rice is also one of his staple foods and occasionally a little milk. He buys two loaves of stale bread a week, which cost 2½ cents a loaf. These are always toasted.

Cabbage is another article of diet, cheap and of great value. He has an arrangement with his grocer by which he buys the scraps of cheese left over from the large cuttings at 2 cents for a day's scraps. He is in sound health and has not had indigestion for 20 years.—New York World.

Linked Eyebrows.

It is popularly believed that if one's eyebrows meet it indicates deceit. Charles Kingsley indorses this belief, but Tennyson has other ideas and poetically speaks of "married brows."

In Turkey meeting eyebrows are greatly admired, and the women use artificial means to bring the brows to this condition, and if art cannot induce thin eyebrows to grow they make up by drawing a black line with paste.

It would appear that the Greeks admired brows which almost met, and the fashionable inhabitants of Rome not only approved of them, but resorted to pigments to make up the lack which sometimes existed.

Some proverbs state that the person whose eyebrows meet will always have good luck, while others state exactly the reverse. The Chinese say that "people whose eyebrows meet can never hope to attain to the dignity of a minister of state," and in Greece of today the man whose brows meet is said to be a vampire, while in Denmark and Germany it is said he is a werewolf.

Overdid It.

"I understand she married him to reform him."

"That was it. And she did the job so thoroughly that now he doesn't like the kind of woman he liked when he married her and is trying to get a divorce."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

SHERIFF SALE.

BY VIRTUE OF AN EXECUTION, ISSUED out of the Justice's Court of Fifth Township, County of Inyo, State of California, and to me directed and delivered, for a judgment rendered and entered in said Court, on the 9th day of August, 1897, in favor of J. B. Dover and against L. B Harrison, I have levied on the following property, to wit: An undivided one-half interest in that certain water right known as the "Wingfield and Harrison" water claim, commencing at a monument of stone on the north side line of Jim Cooper's mill-site location and running along said line east forty rods thence north 20 rods, thence west 40 rods, thence south 20 rods to place of beginning. Is at Stone Corral in South Park Mining District, Inyo County, State of California. Also,

An undivided one half interest in that certain mine or mining claim known as the "Myrtle Lee." This claim is located about three miles southeast of South Park Spring, in the Panamint range of mountains, on the west side of said range, in South Park Mining District, Inyo County, California.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that on the 4th day of February, 1899, at one o'clock p. m. of that day, in front of the Justice's office, in the town of Ballarat, County of Inyo, I will sell all the right title and interest of said L. B Harrison in and to the above described property, at PUBLIC AUCTION, for cash, gold coin in hand to the highest and best bidder, to satisfy said execution and all costs.

A. M. GIVEN, Sheriff

Dated the 13th day of January, 1899.

OFFICIAL.

Proposals for Services of County Physician.

Notice is hereby given by the Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo, State of California that sealed proposals will be received by said Board, at the office of the County Clerk until 10 a. m., and not later, on Thursday, April 6, 1899, for the services of a Physician qualified under the provisions of "An Act for the Regulation of the Practice of Medicine and Surgery in the State of California," attending the indigent sick in charge of the contractor for the care of such persons for the term of one year, beginning July 1, 1899, and ending June 30, 1900.

Said bids to designate the amount per annum for which said Physician will give due and regular medical and surgical attendance upon said sick, and also all such services as may be required for prisoners in charge of the Sheriff.

The person to whom said contract may be awarded shall give a good and sufficient bond in double the sum of the contract price for the faithful performance of such duties. Said service to be paid for by warrants drawn upon the Hospital Fund, upon presentation of bills duly verified, at the regular meetings of said Board.

Bids to be indorsed "Proposals for Service of County Physician," and the same will be opened between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m., and 2 o'clock p. m., of said 6th day of April 1899, and the Board reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

A. C. FREEMAN, Chairman.

Attest: D. J. HESSION Clerk.

Proposals for Boarding County Prisoners.

Notice is hereby given that sealed proposals will be received by the Board of Supervisors of Inyo county, at the office of the County Clerk until Thursday, April 6, 1899, up to the hour of and not later than 10 o'clock a. m. of said day for the boarding of Inyo county prisoners, at the County Jail in Independence and at the Bishop Branch Jail—separate bids for each locality for the term of one year, beginning July 1, 1899 and ending June 30, 1900. Said bids to designate the price per diem for each prisoner, and said board to be paid for by warrants drawn upon the General Expense Fund, upon bills duly verified and presented at the regular meetings of said Board of Supervisors.

Bids must be indorsed "Proposals for Boarding County Prisoners," and the same will be opened between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m. and 2 o'clock p. m. on said 6th day of April, 1899, and the Board reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

Proposals for Care of the Indigent Sick of Inyo County.

Notice is hereby given that sealed proposals will be received by the Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo, State of California at the office of the County Clerk until, and not later than 10 o clock, a. m., on Thursday, April 6, 1899, to contract for the care of the indigent sick of Inyo County for the term of one year beginning July 1, 1899, and ending June 30, 1900.

Said bids to designate the amounts for which parties contracting will maintain all indigent sick properly admitted to contractor's care, on the basis of an average of four patients per day throughout the year; to include all medicine, nursing, board, lodging and washing, and the burial and funeral expenses of any indigent sick person who may die while under such maintenance and care. Said bids must designate the price per person at which all excess of patients over the average of four each day throughout the year will be cared for, such excess to be paid for by extra allowance on presentation of bills, duly verified at the regular meeting of said Board immediately after said contract has expired—the average of four per day to be paid for at the regular meetings of the Board, on bills duly verified, by warrants drawn upon the Hospital Fund of said county.

The person or persons to whom said contract shall be awarded shall give a good and sufficient bond in double the sum of the contract price for the faithful performance of said contracts.

The maintenance care and management of such indigent sick by such contractor shall be at all times subject to the inspection of said Board of Supervisors, or any member thereof or any person appointed by the Board for such purpos.

Bids must be indorsed, "Proposals for Care of Indigent Sick," and the same will be opened between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m. and 2 o'clock p. m. on said 6th day of April, 1899, and the Board reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

SUPERIOR COURT PROCEEDINGS.

Hon. Walter A. Lamar, Judge.

TUESDAY, March 21, 1899.

W. L. Coats vs. Hillside Water Co.—On trial before a jury of four as follows: Julius Shroeder, David Stubblefield, Henry Fiehman, and J. C. Roeper.

WEDNESDAY, March 22 1899.

Lillie J. Scott vs. Thos. Scott.—Decree of divorce granted to plaintiff.

Ed. M. Clark has been down from Bishop all the week.

Miss Susie Roughney of Big Pine is visiting her aunt, Mrs. Moffett.

Nate Mount, an old time Inyoite, is driving stage into Johannesburg.

A social dance at Mairs' Hall last Friday evening celebrated St. Patrick's day.

T. B. Rickey has bought the Robinson and Whittock bands of cattle. Delivery was made this week.

It has been storming on the mountains all the week, and some snow has fallen. No rain in the valley.

Mrs. J. J. Morton came up from Keeler Saturday to assist in taking care of her father, J. N. Rose, who is quite ill with the grippe.

The Schabbell boys, who went to Long Valley to irrigate for T. B. Rickey, were forced to return by the storm. They report a foot of snow when they left and still snowing heavily. That beats irrigating.

G. Sanger and Joe Danielson were in town early in the week. They are developing what promises to be a valuable lead mine in Lead Canyon. There is six feet of galena in the shoot which goes about 50 ounces silver per ton.

Charley Robinson and George Naylor went to Lead Canyon this week to see if it was practical to pack the ore of that section out by way of Mazourka. They decided that it was not. It can be hauled much cheaper by way of Saline to Alvord.

Dr. Sullivan, the dentist now at Independence, has 160 acres of land in Santa Clara County. Will exchange for land of equal value in this county. See me at my tent. Also want horse or mule in exchange for dental work. Here until March 31st. ***

There have been very heavy rains throughout the State. It is expected that good crops of hay will be raised and in many places the grain crop will be saved. The greatest benefit will accrue to stockmen. Private letters state that there will now be an abundance of feed.

A. S. Kilpatrick of the Bishop Flouring mills is making a trip through the southern end of the county and meeting with flattering success. Owing to the fact that our home mills are turning out as good an article as is produced in the State, little or no flour is being imported.

Book Social.

The ladies of Lone Pine are arranging for a Book Social to be given in that town on Saturday evening, April 1st. Each one attending is supposed to represent, either by costume or article worn, the title of a book. A prize will be offered to the one present guessing the largest number of books represented. No pains will be spared to make this a most novel and enjoyable evening, and all attending may be assured that they will be hospitably entertained. No admission charged, but refreshments will be on sale and will be served in quite a unique style. Proceeds to be used in defraying church expenses. All most cordially invited to be present.

Damage Suit.

The Superior Court has been occupied all the week with the case of W. L. Coats vs. Hillside Water Co., a suit for damages. The following named residents of Bishop are here, either as principals or witnesses. J. S. Bourland, W. L. Coats, A. Dell J. Hart, A. O. Collins, J. M. Horton, Chas. Dixon, M. C. Hall, Thos. Williams, Jasper Williams. Frank Williams and Lee Woodworth. P. W. Eorbes Esq., S. E. Vermilyea Esq., and White Smith Esq. are the attorneys in the case. The plaintiffs expect to rest their case to-day, and the trial will probably continue several days longer.

THE WATER QUESTION—3.

Most of our citizens are directly interested in having this water question settled at once, all of them in having it settled as soon as possible. The majority of them would willingly accept some scheme that would mean a pretty high tax on themselves and their children provided the present volume were increased and that some system was carried out which would insure a future and permanent supply. All of them are in favor of any scheme which would not cost too much in tolls and taxes, and which would insure a permanent increase in volume and a continuance at the seasons and times when most needed. Some are so anxious for the settlement of this question that they would be willing, under a proper guarantee, to furnish funds to prosecute the work at once. Until this matter is settled there is no hope of present or future prosperity for this section. Some of us are very positive that collective action will never accomplish anything in this particular. The thought behind this assertion is: "Give me the control of the scheme for my own individual profit and I will give you an increased water supply, and a permanent one." Others say, "you can't do anything in the way of improvement or betterment of the existing conditions, because you haven't the money;" meaning that we can't raise $50,000 or $100,000 for a plan of action which would embrace generations to come. A golden mean between these two extremes can be easily outlined. A scheme can be formulated by and through which we neither have to turn over to some private individual or syndicate the whole of the water franchise for a problematic betterment; or start out with a plan which would immediately cost more than we are able to pay for in many years. We would suggest: 1st. The equitable adjustment of the present titles to the water-supply of the town and vicinity. 2nd. The employment of an expert to ascertain the exact amount of water at all seasons which might economically be secured from the local water-shed. 3rd. To accomplish betterments of the water-shed in proportion to our financial ability for the present, keeping in view the main scheme to accomplish a permanent betterment of the whole watershed, including a material increase of the whole volume of water. If, as some say, "you can't do anything with this water question until it is turned over to some private individual," we would infer that these people would be only too willing to turn over the control of the air to some private individual who had a patent contrivance for excluding bacilli from the human organism. We haven't a doubt but that some very ingenious arguments might be advanced in favor of this monopoly of the air, like the petroleum monopoly for instance. The argument for the monopoly of the air could be made far stronger than the best that have been presented so far in favor of the Standard Oil. No doubt some very learned doctor would come forward for a consideration and prove that without a certain apparatus manufactured by the air monopolists, people's lives would be shortened by so many years and the chances of the microbes downing the average human would be proved by facts and figures that would be appalling to the ordinary mortal. The wonder is that this scheme has not been worked up to date. There are millions in it, as Col. Sellers would remark. By all means let us solve this water question by turning over everything in the shape of titles to some clever fellow with a tongue, a mouth, a jaw with double back action movement and a fund of stories which will extract from the pockets of our citizens every last dollar they have, and promises for more. He will live high at our expense and our men will do all the hard work of improvement and receive prosperity in the sweet bye and bye. Water is just as necessary as air and sunshine. He or they who deprives any citizen of this God-given right must be a great deal smarter and shrewder than the average of his fellows. There will be quite a difference when these water tides will be turned over to some outsider, who will naturally exploit them for all they are worth. When there is trouble, as there will be in the near future, the non-resident owners and controllers of these franchises cannot be gotten at; then what are you going to do about it? We fancy we can hear the strong objurgations, profane and otherwise, that our citizens would indulge in after the complete monopolization of the water franchises has been accomplished, while they are whittling benches outside the stores and indulging in loud talk as to what they would do in spite of the strong arm of the law. In my last article on this question I made the remark that 122 towns from New York down, now owned their own water works; but I was far under the number, for according to the latest statistics on the subject there are more than 53 percent of the towns, big and little that now control their own water supply and the trend in that direction is now growing at a rapidly accelerating pace. Are we to remain behind in the race for public improvement and advance in a matter so vital to our material progress? Of course it is no use appealing to the moral sense in this matter. And yet there is science and scripture for laying stress upon that side of this water problem, for the scriptures say that cleanliness is next to Godliness; if it does not say that it ought to. Scientists prove by facts and figures piled mountain high that an abundance of water is an absolute requisite to the general and particular health of the community wherever located. We have the brains, we have the capital, we have the muscle; and we can solve our water problem if we will only get together. Let us do it.

Will Enforce the Law.

REDLANDS, Cal., March 14, 1899.

Dear Sir,

In view of the somewhat contradictory rumors reported from Washington it may be well to inform your readers that under date of March 13, these definite instructions have been received. "Drive sheep from public lands in Reserves. Cause arrest of herders if they refuse to leave." Further, it should be understood that the penalty for trespassing on the Reserves, (as fixed in Sec. 4, p. 3, Rules and Regulations governing Forest Reserves), is "a fine of not more than five hundred dollars or imprisonment or both, in the discretion of the court." Also, for the owners of the sheep, exemplary damages under civil action. The concession of last year which allowed sheep to cross the Reserves to private holdings, was greatly abused and is not continued.

Truly Yours,
CHARLES S. NEWHALL.
Forest Superintendent.

Fire Tax.

Following is a section of the fire tax bill signed by the Governor.

"The Board of Supervisors must, at the time of levying the county taxes, levy a tax upon all the taxable property within the fire limit of the unincorporated town or village voting such tax sufficient to raise the amount voted. The rate of taxation shall be ascertained by deducting 15 percent for anticipated delinquencies from the aggregate assessed value of the property in the district, as it appears on the assessment roll of the county, and then dividing the sum voted by the remainder of such aggregate assessed value. The taxes so assessed shall be computed and entered on the assessment roll of the County Auditor, and collected at the same time and in the same manner as State and county taxes, and when collected shall be paid into the county treasury for the use of the district in which the tax was voted."

Dr. Sullivan, a prominent San Francisco dentist, who has been doing an extensive business at Lone Pine and Keeler, arrived here Wednesday and will remain one week. He is a man of great experience and wonderful success, carrying the most complete outfit ever brought into this county. When he fills your teeth it's done to stay, and you don't have to go to the next dentist to have it done over again. He has done lots of work over after other dentists. He has been in active practice for twenty-five years and doesn't take a back seat for any man. Here until March 31st. ***

The Grand Jury will meet next Monday for the purpose of acting upon the report of the expert who is examining the county books.

"Indeed it is," she smiled sweetly, "for her. I congratulate Miss Blank."—Exchange.

FOR HIS FATHER'S CRIME.

THE jury had retired to consider their verdict, and those remaining in court were discussing in excited whispers what would be the result of their decision.

At length it came: "Guilty!"

The prisoner at the bar turned paler, and clutched the dock for support; while the judge assumed the black cap and pronounced sentence.

"Richard Clood, you have been found guilty of murder upon evidence which, I think, can leave no doubt in the mind of any person who has been present in the court and heard it."

Then followed the last dread sentence.

"Could there be a fairer daughter of Eve? If I could only win her!"

Clarence Bolton gazed with eyes of passionate love upon a beautiful, girlish figure, just retreating with a tea tray from the rustic arbor in which he was seated.

Clarence Bolton was a pedestrian, and devoted his Saturday half-holidays to tramps in the country. In the course of one of these he had entered a rustic cottage in Kent, where teas were provided for travelers and pedestrians. Here he had met his fate, Nellie Gould.

Clarence had resolved over and over again to declare his passion, but his courage had as often failed him at the critical moment. That one moment in the lover's calendar advantageous above all others came at length, and he seized it.

He had met with an accident and ripped the sleeve of his jacket. He asked Nellie for needle and thread. She not only brought both, but offered to do the stitching for him.

The compact was sealed in the little arbor.

Many happy weeks passed. There always seemed to be one shadow, however, in their pathway—Mrs. Gould. She wore an air of perpetual sadness and gloom, from which not even her daughter's happiness could arouse her.

"Why is your mother always so sad?" Clarence one day asked.

"Poor mother? Haven't you ever heard? I never like to speak about it, but—but—my father was murdered."

"Murdered!" exclaimed Clarence in horror.

"Murdered. It's many years ago now—I was only a little child at the time—and my mother never speaks of it now. But can you wonder at her sadness?"

"No, indeed. But who was the murderer?"

"A wretched man named Clood. He was tried, found guilty and hanged."

"Thank heaven for that. Well, Nellie, when we are married we must have your mother always with us and try to make up for the sorrow she has known."

When he left the cottage that evening Nellie Gould had promised to be his bride in a month's time.

A happier man than Clarence Bolton when he entered the shop of his guardian on the evening following it would have been difficult to find.

William Seex was a prosperous tradesman who had taken a deep interest in the young fellow's career, and Clarence had therefore considered it his first duty to acquaint him with the step he had just taken.

"So long as you are happy, my boy, that's all I care for," said the old man, heartily, when Clarence had told his story. "You've been a good lad and deserve a good wife. But what's her name? You haven't told me her name."

"Oh, I kept that till the last," said Clarence with a laugh. "It's a very pretty name, I can tell you. What do you think of Nellie?"

"Tain't bad sounding. What's the other part of it?"

"Gould—Nellie Gould. Hallo, what's up?"

"Gould? You didn't say that. Has she a father?"

"No, poor girl. He was murdered years ago by a man named Clood. Terrible, isn't it?"

"Terrible—yes."

Mr. Seex strode up and down the room in a state of great agitation. Then he paused and looked pitingly at Clarence.

"Poor boy—poor boy," he said.

"What is there to pity? Why, I'm one of the happiest men in creation."

"Listen, Clarence. I must tell you—though, heaven knows, I would rather cut out my own tongue—your real name is Clood, not Bolton, and—and——"

"Go on; quick, man, quick. Let me hear it all," cried Clarence.

"And the man who murdered Gould was your father."

Clarence covered his face with his hands, while Mr. Seex told him the rest of the story—told him how he, out of deep pity for the boy, had changed his name, educated him and brought him up more as a son than the child of a stranger.

"Don't take it too much to heart, lad. What your father did is nothing to do with you. There's no disgrace resting on you."

No disgrace resting on him! Clarence shuddered, but took his guardian's hand between his own and pressed it gratefully.

How was he to act? Should he marry Nellie and say nothing of his secret? Were he to do so, she might some day discover it, and then she could only curse him. Should he, on the other hand, confess to her everything, and leave her to the responsibility of deciding whether or not the tie between them should be broken? No; that was a responsibility he had no right to place upon her shoulders.

A couple of days later Nellie Gould received a registered letter in which was enclosed $1,500. The letter accompanying it was brief:

"Dear Nellie—I am compelled to leave the country through no fault of my own. I shall never see you again, but my affection for you will always be the same. I shall love you until the day of my death. The money I send is yours. Have no hesitation in taking it, for it was to have been expended on our home. Marry some happier man than

"CLARENCE BOLTON."

Fifteen years had passed. Nellie Gould was now Mrs. Elliott, a middle-aged matron, with three bright-eyed children. The los sof her lover years ago had come upon her at first with crushing force, and she had hoped to hear from him again. Then, after a further lapse of time, she had followed her old lover's request, and married another. With the $1,500 they started a little shop together. It grew and grew until it became one of the most flourishing businesses in Elton.

When the shop was closed in the evening her husband would usually go to the Chequers Inn, at the end of the town, in order to discuss the events of the day with his brother tradesmen.

Returning one evening, he found a beggar resting on the doorstep of his shop. His hair and beard were quite white, his skin wrinkled, and his cheeks hollow. He appeared to be quite worn out.

John Elliott was a kindly hearted man, and now he was touched with pity. He invited the man into the house and gave him some supper. This the wanderer scarcely touched, but followed with eager eyes the figure of Mrs. Elliott.

Then he adroitly gained from John particulars about his family. He had two sons and one girl, John told him. The eldest boy was named Clarence.

"He is named after an old sweetheart of the wife's. It was her wish, and I respected it; for he seems to have been a good sort of fellow. We owe whatever fortune we have to him. His money gave us our first start in married life."

The stranger's hand wandered to his eyes. Had the other been watching he would have seen a tear trickling down the furrowed cheek.

"As you have been kind enough to give me a bed for the night may I ask one other favor? I would like to see that boy of yours—Clarence, I mean—before I go to-morrow. May I?"

The next morning the three children were introduced to the stranger. He took them in his arms and kissed them in turn. At Clarence he gazed long and earnestly, sat him upon his knee and fondled him; and then, while Mrs. Elliott's back was turned, seized a pair of scissors and cut off a piece of the boy's curly hair, which he secreted in his pocket.

Two days after a body was found close to the cottage where Nellie had lived with her mother so many years ago. It was that of the beggar. An inquest was held, but there were no means of establishing it sidentity.

The undertaker found, suspended over the heart, in a little silk bag, two locks of hair—one evidently that of a woman, the other that of a child; and though a parish undertaker is not supposed to have much sentiment he did not disturb them from their resting place.

Of Interest to Skaters.

An experienced skating teacher lays great importance upon the kind of shoes worn. "A great deal is said," he remarked, "about properly supporting the ankle, and people complain that they cannot skate because their ankles are weak. Now, in at least five out of ten of those cases, there is nothing at all the matter with either ankle or its support. The trouble is right here," and he touched the side of the shoe just below the instep and above the hollow of the foot. "This part of the shoe," he continued, "ought to be very snug and stiff, to hold the foot straight, and prevent its twisting between the toe and the heel. That is what usually makes the skater 'wabble' and lose his footing, and then he thinks the trouble is with the ankle," says Harper's Bazar. "The height of the shoe does not matter much."

Dogs to Protect Policemen.

The communal authorities of Ghent have decided to provide the policemen on night duty with dogs capable of defending them in the case of attack. The experiment is an interesting one, and in the towns where it has been tried it is said to have yielded excellent results. This is not the only police reform which is to be introduced in Belgium. At Schaerbeck, one of the suburbs of Brussels, all the policemen will soon be provided with bicycles, special sheds for which are to be constructed at all the police stations.

People do not appreciate the importance of difference in disposition. That which is poison to one man is agreeable to another. Because you like a certain thing, do not insist that others enjoy it. People like anarchy because the first principle is, "I want to do as I please."

NO WOMAN IS EXEMPT.

Regularity is a matter of importance in every woman's life. Much pain is, however, endured in the belief that it is necessary and not alarming, when in truth it is all wrong and indicates derangement that may cause serious trouble.

Excessive monthly pain itself will unsettle the nerves and make women old before their time.

The foundation of woman's health is a perfectly normal and regular performance of nature's function. The statement we print from Miss GERTRUDE SIKES, of Eldred, Pa., is echoed in every city, town and hamlet in this country. Read what she says:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I feel like a new person since following your advice, and think it is my duty to let the public know the good your remedies have done me. My troubles were painful menstruation and leucorrhœa. I was nervous and had spells of being confused. Before using your remedies I never had any faith in patent medicines. I now wish to say that I never had anything do me so much good for painful menstruation as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; also would say that your Sanative Wash has cured me of leucorrhœa. I hope these few words may help suffering women."

The present Mrs. Pinkham's experience in treating female ills is unparalleled, for years she worked side by side with Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham, and for sometime past has had sole charge of the correspondence department of her great business, treating by letter as many as a hundred thousand ailing women during a single year.

All suffering women are invited to write freely to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., for advice about their health.

CLOTHES SPECIALS.

Queer Pockets and Things Tailors Have to Put In Garments.

"No special."

With that remark to the assistant who took down the measurements the tailor dismissed his patron and said that the suit would be finished "sure" on a certain day.

"What did you mean by saying 'no special' to your clerk?" asked the customer.

"Well, that means that you want your clothes made all right and without any crank things about them. Pockets are the great specials. We have customers who want, besides the regular pockets, places in their waistcoats for pencils, eyeglasses and all sorts of things. Some pencil pockets are made to hold only one pencil and some for a bunch. Eyeglass pockets are also ordered in keeping with the shape and style of the glasses, and pockets for cigars are ordered for all sizes, from the little half pencil shape to the great big perfecto. Freak pockets, inside of other pockets, are also in demand, and chamois lined pockets, which we usually make for the watch side of the waistcoat, are ordered often for trousers by men who carry silver trinkets in them."

Another class of special customers are those whose garments are made with a view to the wearer's health. Many men have an inner band of red flannel put on the waist of their trousers as a cure for rheumatism, and some driving coats are made so that sheets of stout paper may be slipped between the breast lining and the cloth when driving against the wind.

"On the whole," said the tailor, "a man in my business has the best opportunity to find out the kinks and queer points about men, not only as to their persons, but their minds."—New York Tribune.

FINERTY'S SERMON.

It Brought Praise From the Preacher Who Didn't Deliver It.

Before ex-Congressman John Finerty became famous as the great American British lion tail twister he was one of the best reporters in Chicago. He was on The Tribune, and one day a certain city editor (best known to fame as the man who always wore a straw hat and smoked a corncob pipe) decided that Mr. Finerty should be disciplined.

It was Saturday, and some time after midnight Mr. Finerty was assigned to report the morning sermon of an obscure minister way down on the South Side. Finerty was the senior, and his associates were thunderstruck. They expected an explosion, at least, but Finerty remained calm and dignified, although a trifle pale. "Then he will resign," they thought, but Finerty walked out and made no sign. To the surprise of every one, he reported the next day as usual and turned in an abstract of the sermon. Every one read it on Monday morning, and it was certainly an eloquent and carefully reported sermon.

That afternoon a man of clerical cut called on the city editor and asked to see the young man who had reported his sermon the morning before. Mr. Finerty was introduced. The man of the clerical cut would like to see Mr. Finerty alone for a few moments. Out in the hallway he asked, "Of course, you were not at my church yesterday morning?"

"No," replied Finerty.

"Well, I simply stopped to thank you for the sermon. It was far more eloquent than the one I preached."

Finerty had composed the sermon in a neighboring cellar beer saloon on Saturday night.—Lippincott's Magazine.

The Swiss Parliament.

Switzerland differs from other countries in many things, and one of the most remarkable is the way in which its parliamentary debates are conducted. A Swiss member of parliament can express himself in French, German or Italian, and the privilege is freely used. When the president of the federal assembly speaks in German, his remarks are translated by a secretary in close proximity to him. All the laws and resolutions, before being voted upon, are drawn up in French, German and Italian, and every official report is published in these three languages.—Birmingham Post.

"Do you believe in love at first sight?" she asked.

"Of course," answered the savage bachelor. "Do you suppose, if a man had the gift of second sight, he would fall in love?"—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Strikes In.

The chill of frost strikes in and carries with it aches and pains. St. Jacobs Oil will follow close behind and drive them out of the system. It will search and cure.

His Mongoose Experience.

"Although I sold tickets in a red circus wagon for years," continued the dime museum man, "I was badly fooled once in an animal deal. I mean by this that I fooled myself. I got a letter from a collector, who wanted to know if I would buy a mongoose. I wrote back to have it shipped at once, and it was to be in the museum ready for exhibition one Monday morning. I had a rather hazy idea of what the beast looked like, but I was sure that it was something big, with tusks, and I told our artist to go ahead on that idea and spread himself.

"He did. The picture he evolved would catch any one's eye at any range. He took a whole frame of canvas and painted for a background a tropical island, with the mongoose chewing up sailors on the shore.

"The picture was finished Sunday, and I couldn't help but rub my hands when I looked at it. The moment it was hung out people flocked around it, and the early morning attendance Monday was remarkable. The doors were opened before I got down, and as I went up stairs I could hear a subdued growl.

"'That's the mongoose,' I said to myself. 'The idiots haven't fed it.'

"It wasn't the mongoose. It was the crowd growling like a Roman mob behind the scenes. They had been lured by the picture, and when they got to the cage labeled 'Mongoose' they could not see the beast at all. It had buried itself in the straw."—Chicago Tribune.

The Leopard and the Pan.

One day a worthy Kulu housewife came out from her cooking and, standing on the ledge of rock at her door, emptied a pan of boiling water into the rank herbage growing below. It fell, splash, on the back of a sleeping leopard, who jumped perpendicularly into the air as high as the roof of the hut. What might have happened next? Who can say? But the astonished woman dropped the pan with a clang upon the rock, and the leopard took one leap down hill. The pan followed, and the leopard's downward leaps became longer and swifter as the pan bounded after it from rock to rock.

When last seen the leopard had just achieved a leap of about 350 feet to the very bottom of the ravine, thousands of feet below, and the pan had whirled about 500 feet over it on to the opposite side. The leopard would have eaten the old woman with pleasure, but a pan which first scalded half the hide off him and then bounded clanging in his wake from the top of the Himalayas to the plains below was something which he could not face.—Good Words.

Wise Lad.

"What will happen to you if you are a good little boy?" asked the kindly old woman.

"I'll get a stick of candy for being good."

"And what will happen to you if you are bad?"

"I'll get two sticks of candy for promising to try to be good."—Chicago Post.

Something Very Soothing.

There is something very soothing in the use of St. Jacobs Oil for the cure of Neuralgia. It soothes the pain, while it strengthens and restores the weak nerves to a natural condition. It is prompt and sure.

"So your rich aunt, Timmidy, only left you one cent." "Yes, I will have to call her my penny auntie."

A new and scientific treatment of all diseases of the Genito-Urinary organs, at once thorough, quick and sure, is that of Dr. Foote and Staff, of 161 Adams Street, Chicago. The doctors believe in prescribing as little medicine as is consistant with certain cure. They are old practitioners and years of experience in their specialty has taught them the needs of every individual case and how best to treat it to effect a complete eradication of the disease germ. Dr. Foote's Syphala is a well known and efficacious one for all blood diseases, while his Vigorala stands formost among restoratives and invigorators of the nervous system.

5 DROPS (TRADE MARK.)

Rheumatism, Sciatica and Catarrh

CURED BY

"5 DROPS" Three Years Ago.

DOCTORS PRONOUNCED HIM INCURABLE.

He is Still Well and Writes, on Oct. 10, 1898: "I Feel it a Duty That I Owe to God and Suffering Humanity to Announce to You and all the World What "5 Drops" has done for Me."

SIBERIA, PERRY CO., IND., JAN. 29, 1896.

SWANSON RHEUMATIC CURE COMPANY:—I would like to thank you for your great remedy, "5 DROPS," and tell you what it has done for me. I had Rheumatism in every joint and in the heart, and I had Catarrh of the Head for 30 years. I was so poorly that I lost the use of my legs and arms, and could not move without pain. I was so crippled that I had done but little work for seven long years, and our family physician, a good doctor, told me that my Rheumatism and Catarrh were incurable, and I believed him. But now, after using "5 Drops" only two months, I can truly say I have not felt so well for seven years. This medicine does more than is claimed for it. At this time my Catarrh is much better and I have scarcely any Rheumatism at all, and the heart weakness and pain are gone. My hearing is now good and my eyesight is much better. I have gained more than 10 pounds of flesh and can do a full day's work. It is the best medicine I ever saw to give a mother who has a young child, for it has the same effect on the child as on the mother. It wards off Croup and cures the Hives of the child and causes sweet and refreshing sleep to both young and old.

WM. M. KELLEMS.

SIX TESTIFY TO ITS TRUTH.

In a letter of Oct. 10, 1898, from Mr. Kellems, he says: "I feel it a duty that I owe to God and suffering humanity to announce to you and all the world that I am yet in the ring with untold thousands of others, to testify to the great merits of your valuable remedy called "5 DROPS." I believe I was the first sufferer in this part of the earth to learn of the existence of "5 DROPS," some three years ago. I was then badly afflicted with Rheumatism, Catarrh, etc., which my letter of Jan. 29, 1896, fully speaks of. All I can say is "5 DROPS" cured me. To make a long story short, "5 DROPS" needs no recommendation in this part of the country, as everybody knows the "5 DROPS remedies around here. It has cured more cases of Rheumatism, Sciatica, Neuralgia and many other pains than any other medicine that has ever been sold or heard of. For the last three years I have noticed the effect "5 DROPS" has on the sick, through my own observations as well as my brother, who is a practicing physician and uses the "5 Drops" in his practice. All ye that wish for further information, write and you are sure to get a reply without any delay. I will (as I have done in this letter) cheerfully recommend it to anyone that I may come in contact with. I myself can never forget what this remedy has done for me and many others.

Yours very truly, WM. M. KELLEMS, Siberia, Ind.

Witnesses to the above: Jas. Brady, J. R. Cox, E. R. Huff, S. Taylor, Dr. S. W. Kellems, Jno. Hays, all of Siberia, Ind.

The wonderful success that has attended the introduction of "5 DROPS" is unprecedented in the history of the world. Think of it! It has CURED more than ONE MILLION AND A QUARTER sufferers within the last three years. This must appeal to you. One million and a quarter people cannot all be mistaken. If suffering we trust you may have sufficient confidence to send for three large bottles of "5 DROPS" for $2.50, which will surely cure you. If not, then send for a $1.00 bottle, which contains enough medicine to more than prove its wonderful curative properties. Prepaid by mail or express. This wonderful curative gives almost instant relief and is a PERMANENT CURE for Rheumatism, Sciatica, Neuralgia, Dyspepsia, Backache, Asthma, Hay Fever, Catarrh, Sleeplessness, Nervousness and Neuralgic Headaches, Heart Weakness, Toothache, Earache, Croup, La Grippe, Malaria, Creeping Numbness, Bronchitis, and kindred diseases.

AS EVERY LADDIE DOES.

Oh, when I was a tiny lad I wandered in a wood,
To look for fairies or for flowers, as every laddie should.

I only got my fingers stung by things that creep and buzz;
I learned to look for them instead, as every laddie does.

I sought the pretty fairy folk in all the yellow flowers,
Where nothing but the busy bees improved the shining hours.

I found a little caterpillar hanging by a thread;
I put him in a buttercup and took him home instead.

I caught some minnows in a pool, and thought myself a man,
Because I found that I could fish, as every laddie can.

I got my father's pocket knife—its blade was red with rust—
And cut my name on many a tree, as every laddie must.

I made a sturdy walking stick, to climb the highest hill,
And whittled till the knife was blunt, as every laddie will.

I owned a treasury of things that I had found or caught,
And changed them off for better ones, as every laddie ought.

I had a little puggy dog, and pets of many kinds,
But some they died, and some got lost, as every laddie finds.

I coveted a pony and a gun to shoot the crows—
A pony is a beauteous beast, as every laddie knows.

What most I loved were fireworks and all that lights and burns,
But these sometimes are treacherous, as every laddie learns.

My coats grew shorter in the sleeves, my slippers crushed my toes,
But such things always smaller seem as every laddie grows.
—St. Nicholas.

JEANNE'S BRAVERY.

FELIX LABARDIE had been a Franc-tireur in the great war of 1870, and I liked nothing better in the evening than to sit and listen to his stories of the terrible time when France lay gasping and bleeding.

One evening we had been silently smoking for some time when he said, "Did I ever tell you, monsieur, how I fell into the hands of the Germans and out again?

"No," I said, "I thought the Germans shot all the guerrillas they caught."

"They let me go free, monsieur," he said, with a grim laugh. "It may seem incredible, monsieur, but Jeanne yonder held the life of royalty on her finger tips."

"I should like very much to hear the story," I said.

"Certainly, monsieur, and if monsieur thinks what was done was wrong he must excuse a woman in love.

"After Sedan, monsieur, a meeting was called in our village, and thirty of us enrolled ourselves as a company of Francs-tireurs. We felt we could do more for France as irregulars than serving under incompetent generals. We were well armed, and a brave and skillful old veteran commanded us. As the Germans were in force around Metz we marched in that direction and made our headquarters in the hills behind a village called Pency, about three leagues from the fortress. It was in Pency Jeanne lived, and from the first moment I saw her, monsieur, I said to myself, 'If fortune is kind, Felix, that girl shall be your wife.' Her father was the miller of Pency, and the accursed Uhlans had almost ruined him. They were very bitter against the invaders, and my profession made me find favor in her eyes. Before we had been at Pency a month we had plighted our troth, on the understanding that we should not marry until France was rid of the enemy.

"Small as our band was, we made ourselves a terror to the marauding Uhlans, thanks to the generalship of old Montbon. Jeanne was invaluable to us. She was all eyes and ears, and Montbon called her the 'head of the intelligence department' of our band. I used to meet her every evening, when it was possible, in a little cave I had discovered, which, having no outlets, was proof against surprise.

"We stayed three months at Pency, and then the place became too hot for us, and we prepared to leave for a village some leagues to the south. I fell into the hands of the Bavarians the very evening before we were to leave Pency.

"Jeanne declares to this day, and I believe rightly, that I was betrayed by a villager, a young fellow named Odeau, who believed the Virgin had intended Jeanne for his wife, and who was even savage when she refused him. But be that as it may, monsieur, I was seized at dusk that evening as I was on my way to meet Jeanne, and was taken so completely by surprise that I had not the least chance of defending myself or trying to escape, and, worse than all, was taken with the rifle in my hand.

"'You are an assassin,' said the stout little officer in command in barbarous French. 'You shall be shot. Where are your companions?'

"But I professed not to understand. I was afraid of being shot on the spot. There was much of the executioner and little of the judge in those days, monsieur.

"Much to my relief, my arms were bound behind me, and we set out for the hamlet where the Crown Prince Frederick had his headquarters.

"As fortune would have it, Jeanne met us on the road. Monsieur would suppose that Jeanne is a quiet little woman, but monsieur has not seen her thoroughly aroused. She was roused then, monsieur. She flung herself on me and tried to release me. Then she seized the bayonet of a Bavarian, and if I had not begged her for my sake to be calm she would have fought the whole party single-handed. Then she fell to beseeching them, for she could speak German well, but they only laughed at her and drove her off with foul words. My heart was like lead then, monsieur. But I did not know Jeanne.

"I was taken before the prince's adjutant, who promised me liberty if I would betray my compatriots. But I feigned stupidity, and when he found that I would tell nothing he ordered me to be shot at five the next morning. 'We give you till then,' he said, 'to find your tongue. You'll be dumb enough after.' And he laughed.

"I was bound like a log, monsieur, and thrown into a hut and brutally kicked. My thoughts were not pleasant all this time. I lay thinking of Jeanne, whom I should never see again, picturing that, woman-like, she would go home and weep in her helplessness and despair. But I did not know her then. She was working for me with all the energy and wit of a woman. Jeanne Jeanne, ma petite, come here."

Jeanne came to the door.

"Come and tell monsieur how you saved me, ma petite."

A blush overspread Jeanne's features.

"What, that foolish story again?"

"Certainly not foolish," I interposed. "I should deem it a kindness if you would oblige me."

"If monsieur wishes it, and monsieur will allow me, I will get my knitting."

"Certainly," I said.

"When I saw him carried off," Jeanne began as soon as she was seated, "I was in despair, for I knew what his fate would be. And then the good Virgin put an idea into my head, and I prayed to her to give me strength and cunning to carry it out. There had been a sharp fight a week before, and I knew Jacques Pellot had possessed himself of some German uniforms that he had taken from the dead. So I demanded them from him and threatened him till he produced them. A sous lieutenant's uniform fitted me nicely, and after cutting off my hair and concealing a pistol and dagger in my tunic I hurried away. I crept along cautiously when I neared the enemy's lines, for my plan was to get through the sentries without being challenged. When I heard the pickets I dropped on the ground and crawled like a snake. And yet I was nearly caught. A German officer was leaning against a tree, and I almost touched him. I lay still without breathing audibly for a long time—how long I cannot say—until he moved away. Then, once inside the lines, I rose up and hastened to the prince's headquarters. I prayed for courage and then walked up to the door. I trembled so that I could hardly speak. Fortunately the officer did not observe my agitation.

"'Take me to his highness instantly,' I said in my best German. 'Important dispatches.'

"'Who from?' he began.

"'To his highness instantly,' I said boldly, but my knees shook under me.

"He looked at me closely in the dim light, and I felt ready to faint. Then without a word he took me to the prince's room. 'Important dispatches,' he said, knocking and showing me in.

"'From whom?' asked the prince.

"'In private, may it please your highness,' I stammered, but feeling that I would not leave without Felix's life or another for it.

"'Retire and leave us, Haupe,' said the prince, and the officer, closing the door behind him, obeyed.

"'And now,' said the prince kindly. 'You look pale and ill, sir. What is your name?'

"The key was in the door, and I turned it swiftly. 'And now,' I said, pulling out my pistol and pointing it full at his face—my hand did not even tremble at that supreme moment—'your highness,' I said rapidly, 'if you call out, you are a dead man.'

"Ah, he was a German, but he was so brave, so brave! He did not even wince, but he looked straight into my eyes and smiled.

"'Ah,' he said lightly, 'a stratagem! Who are you, and what do you want?'

"'Monsieur le prince,' I said, 'I am the daughter of the miller of Pency. My lover, Felix Labardie, was taken by your men to-night as a Franc-tireur. If he is not already dead, he is condemned. I want his life or—you lose yours, monsieur.'

"'A woman!' he said. 'Well done,' and he smiled, and the pistol almost dropped from my hand with the pity of it till I thought of Felix. 'I know nothing of this, my good woman. No, but stay. Here are some papers Elberfeld has left for me to sign. Ah, here it is. Felix Labardie, peasant, taken with arms. To be shot at 5 a. m.'

"'He shall not die, your highness, or'—I could not threaten him with words, but my pistol was steady.

"'But he is an assassin.'

"'No,' I cried, 'he is a soldier, though he does not wear the uniform. Imagine, your highness,' I said, 'if I should have dared so much for a murderer.'

"'But he has fought as a Franc-tireur, not as a soldier.'

"'What of that? And if he had not fought for France in her hour I would spurn him from me. He must go free, your highness, if you value your life.'

"'My life is in the hands of God, mademoiselle,' he said, lifting his eyes to mine. 'Threats do not move me, but you are a brave woman.'

"And then my courage left me, monsieur, and I dropped the pistol and flung myself sobbing at his feet and beseeched and entreated him. And he raised me, monsieur, and made me drink wine and tell him all the story. Ah, but he was brave and a true gentleman! And when I told him all he he said, 'He shall be pardoned,' adding with a smile, 'Such a devoted woman must not go husbandless. And then I fell to weeping again, monsieur, and kised his hand and tried to thank him. And he took me to Felix, and he was released. I flung myself on Felix and cut his bonds myself, and we thanked the prince together. We women don't find out if men are worth it till afterward, monsieur," with a sly look at her husband. "Three days later an orderly came with a bracelet from his highness, and on it was engraved, 'To a brave and devoted Frenchwoman.' See, I wear it still.

"Ah, monsieur, we wept when that noble prince died, and the great doctor could not save him. We sent a wreath, and I presumed to write to the empress. She is a worthy daughter of your queen, monsieur. She sent me a letter written with her own hand. She was worthy of that true and brave gentleman, her husband."—Waverley.

HOW BOOKS ARE BOUND.

A Simple Description of This Useful and Interesting Process.

Bookbinding has been practiced for centuries. Many years previous to the invention of printing the leaves of missals and other manuscripts were preserved by being fastened together and inclosed in covers of wood, sheepskin, etc. Often the covers were richly ornamented with gold, silver and jewels. Some of these volumes are still to be seen in the museums and monasteries of the old world.

There are two main divisions in modern bookbinding—"forwarding" and "finishing"—and in each of these departments there are various subdivisions. Forwarding comprises what is really necessary for the preservation of books; finishing is simply embellishing them.

The first operation in bookbinding is to fold the sheets by means of a thin piece of ivory called a folder; machinery has been used with much success in folding. The object is to bring the pages together in regular order.

After being folded, the sheets are gathered and collated to the numbers, 1, 2, 3, etc., that are placed at the foot of the outside page of the folded sections. These numbers are called signatures. The book is then made solid by being placed in a hydraulic press, or under some other pressure, such as the nature and the size of the book may require.

The next process is to saw indentations in the back of the book, preparatory to sewing. This is accomplished by passing the back of the book or sheets over rapidly revolving circular saws. The book is then sewed on a frame called a sewing bench, each sheet being attached by a thread to cords across the back.

When removed from the sewing bench the book receives its "waste papers," or blank leaves. Then it is trimmed by being cut on the edges with a knife aparatus. The edges are either left white or are colored by being sprinkled with color thrown on with a brush. "Marbled" edges are made by dipping the edges of the leaves in colors that float on the surface of gum water.

The "comb edge" is made by drawing a comb through the colors on the surface of the gum water before the book is dipped. If the book is to have a gilt edge, it is placed in a press and a coating of red color applied; the edges are then sized with white of egg, gold leaf is laid over the sizing, and after it has dried thoroughly the gold leaf is burnished with agate or bloodstone.

A coating of glue is then applied to the back of the book, after which it is backed by means of a machine that gives roundness to the back and prepares it for the cover. The cover is made by boards, cut larger than the leaves of the book, over which the outside material, such as cloth, leather, etc., is fastened with glue, space enough being left between the two boards to fit the back of the book.

After the cover is dried, the embellishment is done by stamping the desired letters or design in gold, black or colors. The cover being thus finished, the back of the book is fitted into it and glued, the blank pages are pasted to the inside of the cover and the book is placed in a press to remain until dry, from which it comes ready for the public.—Philadelphia Times.

About Tobacco.

Wise people do not condemn tobacco when used in moderation. Prof. Huxley said: "Smoking is a comfortable and laudable practice, is productive of good, and there is no more harm in a pipe of tobacco than in a cup of tea." The late Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, at the end of one of his sermons, said: "I intend to smoke a cigar to the glory of God before I go to bed to-night, for I have found intense pain relieved, a weary brain soothed and calm, refreshing sleep obtained by a cigar." Bishop Burnett remarked: "I always smoke while I write;" and Bishop Fletcher said, "I smother my cares in tobacco." Lord Clarendon avowed: "No man in Europe loves a good smoke better than I." Lord Broughham declared: "I certainly derive the greatest benefit from a pipe of tobacco." Thackeray commended tobacco as "one of the greatest comforts of my life—a kind companion, a gentle stimulant, an amiable anodyne, a cementer of friendship."—London Lancet.

Bulk and Weight of Snow.

ECONOMIC COMMISSION FOR UNCLE SAM'S COLONIES.

The new colonial commission, which is to have general supervision of the affairs of the Philippines, Porto Rico and Cuba, is composed of three men from the three States of Ohio, Michigan and Massachusetts. Gen. Robert Patterson Kennedy is the former Congressman from the Eighth District of Ohio. He served in the armies of West Virginia, the Potomac, the Cumberland and the Shenandoah. When he was mustered out he returned to his home at Bellefontaine and became a lawyer. He was internal revenue collector in 1878 and lieutenant governor of Ohio in 1885. He is prominent as a jurist in Ohio. Charles W. Watkins, of Grand Rapids, Mich., has been long well known to Secretary Alger, who feels he can rely implicitly on the sound judgment of the colonial commissioner from Michigan, as well as on that of the two other gentlemen who make up its personnel. The third member of the commission, Lieut. Col. Curtis Guild Jr., of Boston, is engaged in Cuba as inspector general on the staff of Gen. Lee. Col. Guild is a son of the editor of the Boston Commercial Bulletin and is well known in Massachusetts.

The commission's headquarters will be located in Washington. The peculiar functions of the commission will be more economic than political. They will concern the granting of franchises, the supervision of public works and of engineering enterprises, which are now rapidly multiplying in the new territories, with a promise of development in the future that is not less than appalling to the war office.

GOVERNOR OF PENNSLYVANIA.

His Rise from Poverty and Obscurity to Wealth and Distinction.

When Hon. W. A. Stone, newly elected Governor of Pennsylvania, took the oath of office and assumed the reins of State government there entered the executive mansion at Harrisburg a man who has climbed to his present high position over unusual obstacles of poverty and difficulties and who may truthfully be called "a self-made man."

His parents were Pennsylvania farmers, highly respected, but poor. Through all of the early years of his boyhood he had but three months of each year at school, and that a little country one; the remaining nine months he bore his share of the burdens incident to a farm. At 17 he enlisted in the war, and came out, at the close of hostilities, two years later, a second lieutenant. Then for several terms he taught school during the daytime and at night studied until the wee sma' hours fitting himself for his profession, the law. He was admitted to practice in 1870. For the next twenty years he was an active factor in the politics of his State and in 1890 he was elected to Congress, where he remained until he resigned to become chief executive to one of the greatest commonwealths of the Union.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, HARRISBURG.

The executive mansion at Harrisburg is sure to be the scene of many brilliant social functions under the regime of its new mistress. Mrs. Stone loves society and is never happier than when dispensing the hospitality of her home. Their Washington residence was not nearly so pretentious as the executive mansion, of which we present our readers a picture, but during the eight years in which Gov. Stone was in Congress it was always a favorite resort with society, and Mrs. Stone's dinners and receptions were among the notable ones of the season.

Gov. Stone has been married twice. By his first marriage there were two children, Stephen Stone, a Pittsburg attorney, and Mrs. Hickling, of Washington. As Miss Harriet Stone, Mrs. Hickling was one of the capital's reigning belles, her sweet disposition and womanly graces making her then what she is now, a great social favorite. She married Dr. D. P. Hickling, an eminent physician of Washington, and they have two bright little ones, a dainty daughter of 4 and a robust boy of 2. By his second marriage Gov. Stone has had six children, four of whom are living. Miss Jean, a vivacious girl of 14 and her younger sister, Miss Margaret, are attending boarding school at Lake Forest. John, a handsome lad of 12, is very like his distinguished father both in looks and manner, while Isabella, the baby of 7, completes this interesting family group.

Children's Eyesight.

Official tests of the eyesight of Baltimore school children—tests ordinarily used by oculists—to the number of 53,067 show some interesting and suggestive results. More than 9,000 pupils were found to have such defects in these organs as to make school work unsafe, while 53 per cent. of the children were found not to be in the enjoyment of normal vision. Curiously enough, this percentage of defective eyesight steadily decreased with the age of the pupils. The percentage of normal vision was found to be as follows in the different grades: First grade, 35; second, 41; third, 47; fourth, 49; fifth, 48; sixth, 48; seventh, 54; eighth, 56. No explanation is offered for this improvement in eyesight with age and the use of the eyes under school conditions. It was found, however, that many blackboards and maps in the schools were not placed in the proper light, and the report of the oculists recommends yearly examinations hereafter of the pupils' eyesight; also the adoption of a uniform system of adjustable seats and desks adapted to the heights of the children.

THE ROMANS.

Built Aqueducts Solely Because They Had No Suitable Pipes.

People forgetful of the real status of mechanical economy in the time of the Romans have often expressed wonder that they built expensive aqueducts when, it is proved, they knew the hydrostatic principle that water rises always to its own level.

The principle reason undoubtedly was that they had no suitable material to make pipes which would stand the enormous pressure inseparable from an underground system. Lead was out of the question for the purpose because the pipes would have to be made so disproportionately thick, and, besides, water flowing for miles through lead would be poisonous. Short lead and clay pipes were used by them in their cities and houses for the supply of baths, but without cast iron, which they did not possess, they could not have made pipes to carry water long distances. Lastly, the water brought to Rome was strongly impregnated with lime, and this would have caused a great incrustation in pipes and necessitated frequent opening and cleaning, whereas an aqueduct, once built, would, as events have proved, last for a very long time with a very moderate amount of repairs.

No good luck ever surprises a girl of sixteen, and bad luck rarely surprises married people.

HILLIS GOES TO BROOKLYN.

Chicago's Brilliant Preacher Called to the Pulpit of Plymouth Church.

Chicago's brilliant preacher has been called to the pulpit of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, made famous by Henry Ward Beecher and recently vacated by Lyman Abbott. The friends of Rev. Dr. Newton Dwight Hillis expect that he will achieve the same measure of renown and popularity as did the illustrious men whom he succeeds.

Dr. Hillis is a native of Iowa and 40 years old. He was educated at Grinnell Academy, at Lake Forest University, and at McCormick Seminary. For three years after leaving his theological studies he was pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Peoria, Ill. Within that time he built a new church at a cost of $50,000. From 1890 to 1894 he preached from the pulpit of the First Church of Evanston, Ind., where he likewise upreared a new church building. In December, 1894, he succeeded Prof. Swing, of Central Church, Chicago. The new pastor of Plymouth will preach in Brooklyn the same creed he has preached in Chicago. It is the creed of broadest Christianity and humanity, the creed of Beecher. Dr. Hillis is also a writer and has been well called "the poet-preacher of the end of the century."

"PROPHETESS OF EVIL."

The High Priestess of the Dreyfusards Predicts France's Ruin.

Georgiana Weldon is the latest Parisian sensation. She has written a pamphlet which involves those army men who have said that Dreyfus is guilty, and in which she predicts the downfall of the nation.

This woman has been the scourge of a few great men in her time and the puzzle of courts and specialists in psychistry. In 1872 she was a concert singer in London, and on the occasion of Gounod's visit there she spread the report that the German composer was about to become a British subject. It was all Gounod could do to persuade his fellow countrymen to the contrary. She claimed Gounod's compositions as her own and secured a judgment against him for $50,000 in the English courts. She sued Rochefort for libel, was committed to insane asylums, which she sued immediately on being released. She was sent to a convent, where she still resides, but there are Dreyfusards who desire to carry her through the streets of Paris in a chariot.

Bible Kisses.

There are eight kinds of kisses mentioned in scripture: Salutation (1 Sam. xx. 41, 1 Thess. v. 26); valediction (Ruth i. 9); reconciliation (2 Sam. xiv. 33); subjection (Ps. ii. 12); approbation (Prov. xxiv. 26); adoration (1 Kings xiv. 18); treachery (Matt. xxvi. 49); affection (Gen. xiv. 15).

It is said that a colored man has a greater longing for straight hair than an old man has for youth.

HIS FALSE TEETH.

They Nearly Suffocated Him, but the Doctor Got Them.

The fact that the throes of the imagination under great excitement often produce a corresponding physical frenzy was illustrated recently in the case of a man who had gone to sleep with his artificial teeth in his mouth. Waking suddenly with a choking sensation, he found his teeth had disappeared.

He looked in the glass of water where they were usually deposited, did not see them there, and realized that they must be far down his throat. Choking and struggling he hammered on the door of a friend sleeping in the house, who, seeing his critical condition, vainly endeavored to draw the teeth out of the sufferer's throat.

He could feel the teeth, but had not the strength to extricate them. He ran for a blacksmith, who lived a few doors away, but the blacksmith's hand was too big to put into the man's mouth.

A doctor had been sent for, but he was so long in coming that the victim of the accident seemed likely to die of suffocation before the physician arrived.

A little girl of 10 years was brought, under the impression that her small hand might reach the obstacle and withdraw it, but she got frightened and began to cry. The sufferer became black in the face, his throat swelled out and his friends expected every moment to be his last, when finally the doctor arrived.

He heard the history of the case, saw that the teeth were not in the man's jaw nor in their nightly receptacle, felt the throat and chest of the sufferer, and cast his eyes seriously upon the floor. There he saw the whole set of teeth. He adjusted them in the jaws of the patient, told him to breathe freely, and every symptom of suffocation disappeared.

NEW HANDSHAKE.

Introduced in Washington by Assistant Secretary Meiklejohn.

Representative Amos J. Cummings was one of a party of twelve who attended a dinner given by a public official a few evenings since. He knew all the diners save one, a Western politician, who was a friend of the host. The host introduced his Congressional friends to his guest from the West. Mr. Cummings was the first to be introduced. The Westerner, wearing an evening suit, patent leather shoes, etc., advanced, holding his right hand on a level with his forehead. Mr. Cummings approached to within a few feet of the extended hand and halted. He looked the Westerner squarely in the eye, glanced hastily at the outstretched arm, and as he grasped it said smilingly:

"Ugh! You shake hands like Meiklejohn."

At this everybody laughed. Mr. Meiklejohn, who helps Mr. Alger manage the War Department, is noted for his handshake, and his friends have a little quiet fun with him because of his affected manners. It may be remarked in passing that the Westerner is an intimate friend of the Assistant Secretary and has acquired the top-lofty handshake from association with him.—Washington special New York World.

Recent Trade with Spain.

Oregon children naturally keep track of commercial and international affairs, for their State has an extensive seaboard and intimate relations with the wheat markets of the world.

A class in geography was reciting in one of the rooms of the Central schoolhouse yesterday when the matter of interchange of commerce and natural products came up for discussion and review. After referring to other countries and explaining what kind of articles were shipped to Germany, France, and England, the teacher put to the class this question:

"What do we send to Spain?"

A number of little hands went up all over the room, indicating a readiness and desire to answer and the teacher told a bright-looking little girl at the further end of the room that she might tell, and she said:

"We send soldiers to Spain."

"Yes, that is true," said the teacher; "but can you tell what we receive in return?"

"We get islands," came the answer, promptly, from the same little girl.—Portland Oregonian.

A Fashion Album.

After years of patient attention a Boston woman has acquired a scrap book of fashions that is truly unique and amusing. In the early days of the civil war she began clipping plates and fashion paragraphs from mode journals until her proposed volume has now formed several. It is wonderfully odd to review the fads and fancies that flashed like so many meteors through the skies of the past thirty five or forty years. There are the Grecian bend, the chignon, the waterfall, the pullback, the crinoline, the tiny bonnets and the pokes, the large bustles, hoops and the large sleeves. Only extremes of style and oddities are used, or the collection would swell beyond all proportion. As it is, it is the source of much mirth whenever she brings it out as a "company trap."

Mexican Funerals.

The Mexicans have a queer way of burying the dead. The corpse is tightly wrapped in century plant matting, and placed in a coffin hired for about a shilling. One or two natives, as the case may be, place the coffin on their heads and go at a trot to the grave, where the body is interred, and the coffin is then returned.

When a man gets rich, the neighbor women peer back into the history of his married life until they find that his wife once kept a cow. This explains everything.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.,

FRIDAY, MARCH 31.....1899

Reno wants Los Angeles to pray for a dry spell.

The people have been clamoring for rain and a Senator. They have obtained half of what they asked for and seem to be perfectly willing to let it go at that.

Advocates of universal peace want an immediate armistice declared in the Philippines. They should put a white rag on a pole and tell Aguinaldo how they feel.

It is no easy task to conquer a people where the women take the places of their husbands who fall in battle. There are many Molly Pitchers among the native Filipino women.

Governor Roosevelt probably made his few brief remarks under oath with full knowledge that the War Department would have been pleased to have him say something else. At times, when truth seems to require it, Roosevelt is actually inconsiderate.

There is a very prevalent rumor to the effect that Governor Gage may call an extra session of the Legislature, and that, no matter what the implied object thereof may be, the real purpose will be to endeavor to elect a Republican United States Senator. The politicians may desire an extra session, but the people have had enough of this Legislature for at least two years to come. May the Almighty and Governor Gage protect us from any repitition!

President McKinley is likely to hear a good many sharp criticisms and sober truths before the next presidential convention shall be called. Even his own party organs will be compelled by the force of public opinion to discuss the question of President McKinley's responsibility for the incapacity, the demorilization, the jobbery and all the other examples of Algerism that have disgusted and humiliated the entire nation in the conduct of the war.

A New York writer sneers at those other writers who allude to burned hotels as "fire traps" and says they should have done this in advance of the conflagration. Unfortunately the newspaper reporter is not blessed with the gift of prophecy, nor does he have the power to look through a brick wall and discern that it is merely a veneer for a framework of lath. However, the Baldwin, late of San Francisco, had been so often declared a firetrap that knowledge of its condition ceased to interest anybody until the match was applied to the structure.

W. W. Stead, in the English Review of Reviews, commenting on Kipling's poem, "The White Man's Burden," says: "It is an international document of the first order of importance. It is a direct appeal to the United States to take up the policy of expansion. It puts the matter on the highest and most unselfish grounds. The poet has idealized and transfigured imperialism. He has shown its essence to be not lordship but service. We can recall no nobler setting forth of the intrinsic ministry of empire. The whole presentation is steeped in the spirit of self-abnegation and self-sacrifice. It will be strange if these seven stanzas do not prove more than a match for all the millions and all the eloquence of anti-expansionists like Mr. Carnegie and Mr. Bryan. The poet has taken sure aim and it is in the conscience of the American people that his bolt will lodge."

Charity begins at home, and when there is no more suffering and want in this country it will be time enough to begin the self-abnegation act six thousand miles from our coast. Who is indulging in that act now? It is not McKinley; it is not Alger; it is not Hanna; it is not Amour. It is not the Goulds or the Vanderbilts or the Huntingtons. It is not even the officers of the army and navy, for they have a chance to win fame, and it has been in the nature of man since Cain slew Abel to thirst for military fame, and, whether for the benefit of the Filipinos or for their destruction, the officers would be there obeying instructions and upholding the flag. The self-abnegation, then, must be found elsewhere. Is it for the benefit of the Filipinos that the private soldier is asked to tread under a tropical sun and eat rotten beef? If he had not some idea of benefiting his own country, would he do it? Where in this broad land is there a man who will say that he would be willing to face all the hardships of a tropical campaign for the sole purpose of elevating the Filipinos in the scale of humanity?

The self-abnegation view is arrant humbuggery, and it is no use for us to try too fool each other with it. Let us, therefore, discuss the conquest solely from the point of benefits to this country. There is plenty of precedent for conquest; for the annihilation of peoples for the benefit of the conquering country, but, outside of religious wars, where the soldier thought his soul would go direct from the battle-field to heaven, there has been no self-abnegation war—no self-abnegation conquests. If our writers will come squarely down to business and tell us how much this country is going to make in dollars and cents; how much it is going to elevate this people, they may arrive at some results. If a skirmish over in Cuba causes us to have to levy half a billion on the necessities of the people of this country, how much money can we make by conquering and holding the Philippines? If somebody can tell us how many thousand billions we can rob the Filipinos of, we may try to find out the answer by the old "single rule of three."—Colusa Sun.

Demand For Horses.

California is wet all over and clear through, and bounteous harvests always follow that condition of the soil. From one end of the State to the other the benefits of this generous downpour are felt. With the outlook for immense growths of grass and grain such as now presented, there should be a large amount of horse breeding done in California this season. The demand for good horses is already greater than the supply, and will continue for several years yet. There are so few foals of 1898 and 1899 that the young horses of the next few years will be very scarce and prices are bound to go up much higher than they are at present. Every good mare in California should be bred this year, and even then there will be a shortage of three-year-olds in 1903. The demand for good horses will increase for the next five or six years to a moral certainty, and those who take advantage of the opportunities now offered will certainly profit by them. Good horses are scarce in California, and the demand will increase this summer when the crops are ready to harvest. Horses that weigh 1,250 pounds and over and are sound are not easy to find except at what would have been considered high prices a few months ago. Heavy draft animals are very scarce—truck teams especially. The demand for mules suitable for farm and Government work is increasing. A farmer of our acquaintance who one year ago sold a band of ten two-year-old mules, just broken to plow, for $70 per head, sold a band of the same description last week for $110 per head. A team of six year old half breed Percherons, well broke and in good condition, brought $300 in this city a few days since. The demand is for size, style and good manners. The day when a horse breeder could bring a car load of half broken horses averaging 800 or 900 in weight to this city and get from $75 to $100 per head for them is passed. The horse buyers for street railroads have lost their jobs. Horses to bring ready money now-a-days must be thoroughly well mannered, whether they are of the pony, road, carriage or draught type. If they are educated to perform the duties that will be required of them, and are sound and all right they will bring fair prices in this market at the present time.—Breeder and Sportsman.

In response to a telegram from Ventura County, the Crowley horses were driven south last Tuesday. The animals have been all winter at the Rawson ranch. There were 146 horses owned by six Ventura men and Deputy Assessor Ben Yandell collected over $40 taxes from the drivers.

A Tulare schoolmaster says that one of his pupils recently came to school bringing the following excuse from his mother:

"Dear Sir—Please excuse my boy a-scratching hisself. He's got a new flannel shirt on."—Sentinel.

SHERIFF SALE.

BY VIRTUE OF AN EXECUTION, ISSUED out of the Justice's Court of Fifth Township, County of Inyo, State of California, and to me directed and delivered, for a judgment rendered and entered in said Court, on the 9th day of August, 1897, in favor of J. B. Dover and against L. B. Harrison, I have levied on the following property, to wit: An undivided one-half interest in that certain water right known as the "Wingfield and Harrison" water claim, commencing at a monument of stone on the north side line of Jim Cooper's mill site location and running along said line east forty rods thence north 20 rods, thence west 40 rods, thence south 20 rods to place of beginning. In at Stone Corral in South Park Mining District, Inyo County, State of California. Also.

An undivided one half interest in that certain mine or mining claim known as the "Myrtle Lee." This claim is located about three miles southeast of South Park Spring, in the panamint range of mountains, on the west side of said range, in South Park Mining District, Inyo County, California.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that on the 4th day of February, 1899, at one o'clock p. m. of that day, in front of the Justice's office, in the town of Ballarat, County of Inyo, I will sell all the right title and interest of said L. B. Harrison in and to the above described property, at PUBLIC AUCTION, for cash, gold coin in hand to the highest and best bidder, to satisfy said execution and all costs.

SUPERIOR COURT PROCEEDIKGS.

Hon. Walter A. Lamar, Judge.

In the action of W. L. Coats, plaintiff, vs. Hillside Water Co., defendant, tried in the Superior Court on appeal from the Justice's Court, of first Township, the jury last night returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $299, said sum being the full amount prayed for in plaintiff's complaint.

Fred Smith came down from Bishop yesterday.

Miss Oro Eldred visited Independence this week.

Mrs. B. F. Totten returned to Lone Pine yesterday.

I. H. Mulholland left for San Francisco last Saturday.

Assemblyman Mack will be home on Monday next.

Mrs. D. Pitman of Big Pine is visiting Mrs. J. D. Blair.

J. F. Beale took his little daughter, Lottie to Reno last week, where she will attend school.

J. C. Irwin purchased a handsome Albenton four-year-old stallion from F. McIver this week.

Thos. Dixon went to Bishop yesterday.

The following commercial travelers were in town this week: E. R. Shiff, H. Franklin, I. House, F. A. Coxhead.

Wm. Muth-Rasmussen gives us the following item of interest:

"After some unavoidable delay caused by correspondence, I have ascertained that this county has at least 73 bee owners with 3,805 hives of bees. Forty-six bee keepers produce honey for market. Some have not reported, and there are no doubt bees not known of on many farms. If all the hives could be counted the number would probablo equal that of seven years ago. viz., 4,000."

Forest and Water Society.

The Forest and Water Society of southern California was organized in Los Angeles last week. In response to an invitation from the Southern California Academy of Sciences a number of men representing various local interests gathered at the Chamber of Commerce to form an organization that shall have as its object the preservation of surplus water in southern California. The objects of the new organization are as follows:

First—Further storage of the surplus rainfall in the wet season for summer use; reclamation and improvement of the desert and arid lands by this means; to support the work in this line being done by the United States Geological Survey.

Second—Institution of a rational system of managing forests and mountain watersheds.

The following statement of the water situation in southern California was made. "The safety of the community demands the arrest of all further forest denudation in southern California. The sole enemy in this is fire. The increasing ravages of fire are a menace to every water shed in southern California. Forest denudation has increased torrent and flood action on a rainfall not increased It has created torrents, has caused serious damage where watersheds have been much injured, as in the watersheds of the San Gabriel and Santa Clara. On the other hand mountain streams and springs have given out, lessening the summer supply to the injury of irrigation. Besides these important considerations is the probable and unfavorable modification of climate due to forest denudation. Greater extremes of heat and cold must be expected where the forest covering is removed. The forest is like a blanket over the mountains—it retards radiation of heat. Air on a denuded mountain rapidly cools' flows down the naked mountain sides and canyons out into the swails and lowlands in crop and orchard. This means more severe frosts. Extremes of heat must also be more numerous and agricultural returns must diminish."

Report of Grand Jury.

To Hon. Walter A. Lamar, Judge of the Superior Court of Inyo County, State of California:

Your Grand Jury conclude their report as follows: We hereto attach the report of expert T. M. Kendrick and make it a part of this report, and we hereby order that the District Attorney take immediate steps to collect the amount found as deficiencies against the several officers.

JAMES A. MCKENZIE, Foreman.

Dated March 29, 1899.

Independence Cal., March 28th 1899.

To the Hon. Grand Jury of Inyo County, California:

GENTLEMEN:

Appointed by your committee to expert the county books of Inyo County, I entered upon my duties January 26th, 1899 and report as follows—

ASSESSMENT ROLL.

Assessment Roll of 1895. Amount of errors in computing property values, against the County, pages 30, 174, 180, 202.....$8 09

Assessment Roll of 1896. Amount of errors in computing property values, against the County, page 189...$3 01

Assessment Roll of 1897. Correct.

Assessment Roll of 1898. Amount of errors in computing property values, against the County page 197..... 15

SHERIFF'S AND TAX-COLLECTOR'S BOOKS.

In these I find no errors.

TREASURER'S BOOKS.

The accounts in these books are clear and distinct. There is a receipt for all moneys received and a warrant for all moneys paid out. I have examined these books with particular care, for to them nearly all the other County books are supplementary. I find them correct.

The Treasurer's report published in the INYO INDEPENDENT, January 1st, 1899 is a true copy from the Treasurer's books.

RECORDER'S BOOKS.

These comprise eighteen books, in which the entries are subject to fees. Fees have been fully paid in the following books:—Mortgages, Assignment of Mortgages, Agreements, Leases, Mechanic's Liens, Sheriff's Certificates, Transcript of Judgments, Bills of Sale, Powers of Attorney, Marriages, Orders and Decrees of Probate Court, Orders of Attachment, Homesteads.

Fees have been ommited in the following books:

Deeds, three omissions	$3 00
Chattel Mortgages, one ommision	1 50
Pendency of Actions, one omission	75
Water Location, one ommission	50
Marks and Brands three ommissions	2 25
Errors in addition in fee books against the County	6 90
Total	14 90

COUNTY CLERK'S BOOKS.

These books consist of Register of Actions of the Superior Court; Civil and Criminal, Probate Proceedings.

Errors on fee book in favor of the County	3 25
Errors on fee book against the County	1 20
Balance	2 05
Total due County on fee books	12 85

I commend the introduction of books of printed forms by the County Recorder as a marked and decided improvement facilitating the work of recording, and materially lessening the liability of mistakes.

Many valuable documents and papers are in the County Clerk's charge. I report them carefully and properly segregated and classified.

AUDITOR'S BOOKS.

These books are kept with care, and are properly check books on those of the other County officers. The Auditor's report published in the INYO INDEPENDENT, January 1st, 1899, ,corresponds with the Auditors balance of that date.

All of the above books in the County Court House I have examined carefully and report them in a better condition on this date than they were January 1st, 1895.

BOOKS OF THE SUPERINTENDENT OF SCHOOLS.

These books consist of a Day Book and Ledger. In them are the following errors in the School Fund:

July 1st 1896, Big Pine, balancing account	$4 00
July 1st 1896, Milton, balancing	1 00
December 31st 1897, Riverside, posting	25 50
May 15th 1897, Round Valley, posting	1 00
June 6th, 1898, Acc't W. C. Bulpitt charging requisition	5 00
December 19th 1898, Round Valley posting	1 00
July 9th 1897, Lone Pine balancing	40
March 30th 1897, Big Pine Library, requisition	05

The above errors are corrected by the Treasurer's Books.

PUBLIC ADMINISTRATOR.

I find no books giving the business of this office, but from documents on file report the following:

August 23rd 1894, H. H. Howell Public Administrator rendered final account showing $29.05 due on McFetridge estate; February 8th 1898, final account showing $144.67 due on James Daly estate.

There is no record of these amounts being paid.

June 4th 1898, order to sell personal property of the estate of M. J. Canadas filed.

I can find no returns.

The last semi-annual statement of the Public Administrator was filed January 1st, 1897.

I note that the Assessment Roll of 1898, compared with that of 1897, shows a decrease of 11½ per cent in mortgages.

Respectfully submitted,
T. M. KENDRICK.

Easy Way to Handle Fodder.

One season when I had a great deal of fodder to feed at quite a distance from the stack I nailed some sheep crate pickets across the wheelbarrow, as shown in the illustration, and using a small rope to bind it on I found I could wheel large loads of fodder. This came very handy for moving fodder when it was not thought advisable to employ the team. It is better to move it this way than by the arm load, says a correspondent of the the Iowa Homestead.

FOR MOVING FODDER.

White Clover With Bermuda.

White clover grows well in combination with Bermuda. As Bermuda and white clover make their greatest growths at different periods of the year, they fit each other very well. The quantity of Bermuda sets required for an acre varies with the distance given in dropping them and how finely they are cut up. About ten bushels will sow an acre very well. Put them out in March or early in April. We know nothing better for pasture than Bermuda and clover.—Southern Cultivator.

Big Pine News.

BIG PINE, March 22, 1899.

ED. INDEPENDENT:

The coming town of the Valley still forges to the front in the matter of actual growth. S. H. Spratt will soon complete one of the most imposing structures in the valley. Non-residents will understand that proper genius has been employed in planning and erecting the new Spratt residence when they know that master builder and architect "Dad" Showalter, now of the hamlet is responsible for the ornament of Big Pine above referred to, Dan Hall on Educational Avenue has put his extensive yard into a receptive condition for the display of landscape gardening—look out for a fine place at Dan's in the near future. A spirit of burnishing up has been developed by the rapid movement of the atmosphere in these parts and many long neglected opportunities for neat surroundings have been seized, and the results are highly satisfactory. Quite an amount of talk about the Yosemite and Tioga wagon road has been indulged in at this place. The Bloody Canyon route is strongly recommended by those familiar with the eastern slope north of here. If the interests of Inyo are to be observed in the matter, her residents should speak in time or forever hold their peace.

At the last regular meeting of General John A. Logan Post, G. A. R., the following resolution was unanimously adopted: "Resolved, That it is the desire of Gen. John A. Logan Post, G. A. R., that Memorial Day services be held by said Post at Big Pine provided it shall be agreeable to the residents of said town." A meeting has been held at Big Pine to consider the above proposition, the result of which will be reported to the Post April 1st. The resolution has been eagerly responded to, committees have been appointed and all necessary preliminary steps taken to properly celebrate Memorial Day at the hamlet. In view of the fact that a more than old time fraternity feeling has been restored to the erst while discordant sections by events transpiring since last Memorial Day, a full attendance of the veterans of the Gray and the Blue would be an enjoyable occasion for Inyo. As I write, a corps of stalwart braves, aided and abetted by "ye ladyes faire" of the hamlet, are putting their hands to the rocks for the completion of the stone fence around the cemetery of Big Pine. This effort, one of many, will answer the prayer of all good Big Piners for a decent last resting place. Of late the dead one's acre has been shared with the frisky sheep and goat and the enterprising "stray" of all sorts and conditions of development.

The revival of interest in base ore mining by our people has resulted in the discovery of a very promising lead claim in the neighborhood of the old Montezuma by the Blake brothers. Assays from top ore give 70 per cent lead with 60 ounces silver. Discoveries of small paying dry-wash placers are reported a short distance to the north-west of Big Pine. The friends of Pioneer Steve Gregg will be pleased to know that he has been endorsed by electors of all sorts of political whims at the hamlet and is quite likely to handle our correspondence another term. Rev. A. L. Hazlett of Bishop has held quite an interesting string of revival meetings at the hamlet, the little church opposite the "knowledge shop" gaining about a dozen members.

The carnal minded of the hamlet will dulge in a hop at Tom Callow's in honor of the close of the windy month and a rebound from the too rigid observances of the lenten time.

Yours Respectfully,
SWAMPER.

AGED WOMAN RIDES A BICYCLE.

Probably the oldest living bicyclist is a woman in County Essex, England, aged 93, who is an adept rider and whose sprightliness is astonishing. Most people could enjoy health until very old age if they took proper precautions to prevent diseases of the digestive organs by taking an occasional dose of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. Even after dyspepsia, indigestion, biliousness and constipation have secured a foothold and become chronic, the Bitters will afford speedy relief.

The clay eaters down in Georgia probably love their native soil better than anybody.

Labor Buys the Sweetest Sleep

But for insomnia or sleeplessness, and that unnatural weakness and weariness of mind, body, nerve and muscle, a reliable tonic is needed, like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which gives sweet, refreshing sleep and overcomes that tired feeling. It has the endorsement of millions as the best medicine money can buy. Take only Hoods.

FRENCH MARRIAGES.

Personal Wishes of Girls Are Now Considered.

Miss Anna L. Bicknell is an English lady who has had most unusual opportunities for studying French life. For a number of years she was a governess in the household of Napoleon III., and resided in the Tuileries. For the Century Miss Bicknell has written an article on "French Wives and Mothers," in which she says:

The old marriage de convenance, which caused so much sorrow and consequent evil in former days, when a girl was taken out of a convent to be shown the man to whom she was about to be married, is now a thing of the past. It must be acknowledged, however, that marriages are still made up, often too hastily and superficially, by nicely balanced family arrangements and by the intervention of friends. Nevertheless, attraction and repulsion are now taken into consideration, and a girl is no longer forced to marry a man whom she positively disliked. I could quote instances in the very highest (historical) aristocracy where, at the last moment, after the trousseau had been sent in (marked, according to custom, with the united initial letters of the two names elaborately embroidered) and all the social preparations made, the marriage was broken off because the bride had declared that she could not "get accustomed" to the bridegroom, nor endure the idea of seeing his face in her home during her natural life. In one of these instances the family lamentations over the initials of the trousseau were really amusing. Fortunately, a substitute was soon found, whose name, like that of the rejected suitor, began with an X, and the complications were thus happily settled.

The great object of the French girl's life is marriage. From the time of her birth her parents have prepared for this event, and in many cases they have considerably straitened their income and curtailed their enjoyment to make up her dot. Every girl in every class is expected to have something; those who have nothing are exceptions, and constitute a minority of old maids. The girls who from choice do not marry generally become nuns, usually much against the wishes of their parents. The old tales of young women being forced into convents to improve their position of their brothers are forgotten in these days, when, while no child can on any pretense be deprived of a share in the father's inheritance, monastic vows are not recognized by law. Nuns and spinsters are exceptions; marriage is the rule.

Longfellow was especially fond of presiding over the teapot at his own table, and always made the tea for his family and guests—making it well, too.

A new story by Charlotte M. Yonge is entitled "The Patriots of Palestine, a Story of the Maccabees;" and, as its title implies, it has a Scriptural background.

Susan Hale's book, "Men and Manners of the Eighteenth Century," shows in a very interesting way the contrast between the life and customs of those days and of these.

A new literary aspirant is a New York society girl whose pen name is Cora Maynard, and who is the author of "The Letter and the Spirit." She is planning a novel in the line of Mrs. Burton Harrison's work.

"Tekla," the historical romance by Robert Barr, deals with events of the fourteenth century. It has been compared to the masterpieces of Anthony Hope, Conan Doyle and Stanley Weyman.

Richard Harding Davis' growing popularity is apparent from the following record of the sale of his books: "The King's Jackal," 25,000; "Soldiers of Fortune," 58,000; "Gallagher, and Other Stories," 40,000; "Cinderella, and Other Stories," 13,000; making a total of almost 136,000 copies.

Paul Leicester Ford, who is now in Europe, left behind him the manuscript of a volume of short stories, written in a light and humorous vein, and containing also two plays planned for amateur performances, entitled "The Best Laid Plans," and "Man Proposes." The book will be called "Tattle Tales of Cupid."

James Whitcomb Riley thinks the lot of a poet a hard one. In a recent interview he said: "If you're called as a witness in a lawsuit some little attorney squares himself off and says, with withering scorn: 'Let me see, you're a poet, are you not? H'm, yes. Gentlemen of the jury, the witness is a poet'—and your testimony is killed dead as a door nail."

A Fashion Album.

After years of patient attention a Boston woman has acquired a scrap book of fashions that is truly unique and amusing. In the early days of the civil war she began clipping plates and fashion paragraphs from mode journals until her proposed volume has now formed several. It is wonderfully odd to review the fads and fancies that flashed like so many meteors through the skies of the past thirty-five or forty years. There are the Grecian bend, the chignon, the waterfall, the pullback, the crinoline, the tiny bonnets and the pokes, the large bustles, hoops and the large sleeves. Only extremes of style and oddities are used, or the collection would swell beyond all proportion. As it is, it is the source of much mirth whenever she brings it out as a "company trap."

Every woman has a vague idea that all her husband does every day is to open his office, read, smoke and count his money.

Every time a girl visits at a house the men folks are kept in a dazed condition trying to figure out how she got so many clothes into one little trunk.

Beggar—Madam, would you please help an old soldier along who has seen many battles? Benevolent Lady (handing him a shilling)—Where—India or Egypt? Beggar—In the illustrated papers, mum.—Tit-Bits.

Mr. Harix (after reading letter from son at college)—John says he is a quarterback. Mrs. Harix—Wa-al, send him th' quarter, an' let him pay up. We can't afford to hev him in debt fer th' sake uv a small sum like thet.—Judge.

"Mr. Scatterton prides himself on being strictly impartial." "Yes," answered the unamiable man, "I once went hunting with him. He didn't seem to care whether he hit the rabbit, the dog or one of his friends."—Washington Star.

Young lady—You are a wonderful master of the piano, I hear. Professor von Spieler (hired for the occasion)—I blay aggompaniments zometimes. Young lady—Accompaniments to singing? Professor von Spieler—Aggompaniments to gonversations.—Tit-Bits.

Customer—Look here! The first time I used this cheap umbrella I bought of you, the black dye soaked out and dripped all over me. Dealer—Mein frient, that was our new patent self-detective umbrella. If any one should steal that, you'd know him by his clothes.—Tit-Bits.

"What's this?" asked the baggageman, as the man with the truck tossed a well-wrapped bundle into the car. "A feather bed?" "Yes, sir," spoke up the owner, standing on the depot platform and grinning maliciously, "with a trunk on the inside of it. Throw it as hard as you please."

Former employer—And so you are a newspaper man now, Jimson? Jimson—Yes, sir, I'm the editor of the job department. Former employer—Editor of the job department? Jimson—Yes, sir; I carries in coal, and scrubs the floor, and washes down the windows, and all such editin' as that, sir.

Mrs. Newlywed—That is our new burglar-alarm—you see, if a burglar should get into the lower part of the house, that would ring. Her mother—Oh!—and scare him off? Mrs. Newlywed (doubtfully)—Well, it might; but it would give Clarence and me plenty of time to hide in the attic, anyway.—Puck.

Wipe Out.

It is the specific virtue of penetration in St. Jacobs Oil which carries it right down to the Sciatic nerve in the cure of Sciatica, and the effect is to soothe the nerve and wipe out the pain.

"Be Quick with the dead," seems to be the saving motto of some Kansas City undertakers.

No household is complete without a bottle of the famous Jesse Moore Whiskey. It is a pure and wholesome stimulant recommended by all physicians. Don't neglect this necessity.

AIDED BY MRS. PINKHAM.

Mrs. W. E. Paxton, Youngtown, North Dakota, writes about her struggle to regain health after the birth of her little girl:

"Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—It is with pleasure that I add my testimony to your list, hoping that it may induce others to avail themselves of your valuable medicine.

"After the birth of my little girl, three years ago, my health was very poor. I had leucorrhœa badly, and a terrible bearing-down pain which gradually grew worse, until I could do no work. Also had headache nearly all the time, and dizzy feelings. Menstruations were very profuse, appearing every two weeks.

"I took medicine from a good doctor, but it seemed to do no good. I was becoming alarmed over my condition, when I read your advertisement in a paper. I sent at once for a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and after taking two-thirds of the bottle I felt so much better that I send for two more. After using three bottles I felt as strong and well as any one.

"I think it is the best medicine for female weakness ever advertised, and recommend it to every lady I meet suffering from this trouble."

Maternity is a wonderful experience and many women approach it wholly unprepared. Childbirth under right conditions need not terrify women.

The advice of Mrs. Pinkham is freely offered to all expectant mothers, and her advice is beyond question the most valuable to be obtained. If Mrs. Paxton had written to Mrs. Pinkham before confinement she would have been saved much suffering. Mrs. Pinkham's address is Lynn, Mass.

William Black's Characters.

Sir Wemyss Reid notes that William Black seldom allowed himself to be drawn into conversation about his work. One of Reid's recollections runs thus: "One day, in the faroff past, I was walking along the sea front with Black, at Brighton, when he said abruptly and with reference to nothing that had been passing between us: 'We are not all engaged in running away with other men's wives. There are some of us who are not the victims of mental disease or moral deformity. I do not even know that anybody of my acquaintance has committed a murder or a forgery. Yet people are angry with me because I do not make my characters in my books odious in this fashion. I prefer to write about sane people and honest people, and I imagine that they are, after all, in a majority in the world.'"

Some Went to Glory.

I once asked a district nurse, says a writer in The Cornhill Magazine, how the various sick cases had been going on during my absence from the parish. At once the look which I knew so well crossed her face, but her natural professional pride strove for the mastery with the due unctuousness which she considered necessary for the occasion. At last she evolved the following strange mixture, "Middling well, sir; some of 'em's gone straight to glory, but I am glad to say others are nicely on the mend."

Starting Him Right.

"Ah!" sighed the sentimental youth. "Would that I might install a sentiment in your loyal heart"—

"Sir," interrupted the practical maid, "I'd have you understand that my heart is no installment concern."—Chicago News.

The Year Round.

All the year around chronic or neglected rheumatism hangs on. It is worse in chilly, damp weather, but never so bad that St. Jacobs Oil can't promptly and effectually cure it.

Distinctions.

"Did our friend retire from politics?"

"Well," answered the practical worker, "it wasn't what you'd call a 'retire.' It was a knockout."—Washington Star.

The chief ingredients in the composition of those qualities that gain esteem and praise are good nature, truth, good sense and good breeding.

The skins of animals were the earliest forms of money. Sheep and oxen among the old Romans took the place of money.

Enlarged Prostate Cured.

The Bane of Old Age No Longer To Be Dreaded.

A Man Eighty-two Years of Age Cured In Dixie, Ark

One of the oldest and best known men in Perry County has the satisfaction of enjoying perfect health after suffering for more than fifteen years with chronic prostatic enlargement and inflammation, and will cheerfully tell anyone how he was cured.

MR. H. L. TRUNDLE.

We want this to reach the eyes of every reader of this paper. Mr. H. L. Trundle, Dixie, Ark., is eighty-two years of age, as hale and hearty a man of his age as can be found in the State of Arkansas; in fact, he looks as young as a man of sixty years. For more than fifteen years Mr. Trundle was a slave to prostatic disease. You men who are afflicted know what it means—the days of unrest, the nights of torture and uneasiness, the pain, the frequent calls to pass water and the inability to do so. He could scarcely get about the house, feeble, trembling and racked with pain from head to foot.

In this condition he read the startling announcement in his paper that a marvelous new method for curing prostatic disease had been discovered. He wrote to the address given for full particulars, and at once obtained the remedy; in less than ten days more he had the satisfaction of experiencing relief. His case was chronic, deep-seated, and the chances of recovery on account of his age were against him. Yet sixty days of continuous use of the famous Solvent-Alterans method cured him.

You men who are afflicted can have the same experience if you do what Mr. Trundle did; he used Solvent-Alterans, a new-method treatment. It is described in two nicely written books which you can get free of charge, by mail, by sending your name and address to the Empire Medical Company, 215 M, Smith Building, Boston, Mass. It won't cost you a cent to get the information, and it may be worth hundreds to you. Write to-day, and refer to this article.

SERMONS OF THE WEEK

Enlightened Minds.—A blind scriptural faith no longer serves enlightened minds.—Rev. C. W. Wendte, Unitarian, Los Angeles, Cal.

Christianity.—Christianity cannot be separated from the individual who perfectly lived it.—Rev. A. A. Rice, Universalist, Los Angeles, Cal.

Joy in the Lord.—Where there is joy in the Lord there is power in doing God's service.—Rev. J. F. Carson, Presbyterian, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Past.—American thought is apt to depreciate the past on account of its great love of liberty.—Rev. Dr. Breen, R. C., Rochester, N. Y.

Peace.—Shun evil, do good, seek peace and follow it until you succeed in gaining it for yourself and promoting it among all men.—Rev. C. K. Nelson, Bishop of Georgia.

A Forgotten Day.—There is no corner of the past but we must unearth it to get at the ultimate facts of a forgotten day.—Rabbi Morris H. Harris, Hebrew, Boston, Massachusetts.

A Change.—That a change is taking place in the general thought of the Christian world regarding the final destiny of mankind no one can deny.—Rev. H. W. Pinkham, Baptist, Denver, Col.

An Infallible Guide.—As an infallible guide when preplexed as to what should be done in a given case, "Do unto others as you would they should do to you."—Dr. Pratt, Swedenborgian, San Jose, Cal.

Devotional Habits.—It is well to be in church a few moments before mass begins, which time should be occupied in an effort to become collected and devotional.—Rev. Thomas C. Clancy, R. C., San Francisco, Cal.

Man.—Man is made in the image of God, and there should be no distinction in our churches. The true spirit of Christianity is to put itself in touch with the common people.—Rev. A. J. Canfield, Universalist, Chicago, Ill.

The Guidance of God.—God is the only safe and competent guide, and he has given evidence to this effect in his word. We should place our children under this guidance.—Rev. David James, Presbyterian, San Francisco, Cal.

A Great Idea.—A great idea has for a long time been before the Anglo-Saxon world—the idea of a union for the highest ends known to man, of English-speaking peoples.—Dr. R. Thomas, Congregationalist, Boston, Mass.

Definition of God.—Theology is a definition of God; reverence is the worship of God; and that definition which provides the most reverence toward him is the best definition.—Rev. Dr. Abbott, Congregationalist, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Present Crisis.—The present crisis has been termed the third and greatest in American life. The future relationship of America to the Orient is deeply interesting.—Rev. Leslie Sprague, Universalist, Grand Rapids, Mich.

The Law of Christ.—We are not under the laws of Moses, but under the law of Christ, and under this law it requires that we believe, that we enlist, that we develop and that we do service.—Rev. C. C. Bowen, Swedenborgian, San Francisco, Cal.

Equality.—Equality in diversity is the truth upon which, in speaking of the relation of the sexes, Christ set the seal of His sanction. Primacy has its place in the everlasting law of the family.—Rev. W. R. Huntington, Episcopalian, New York City.

Americanism.—Americanism abroad stands higher in her influence in commercial values and Christian missions than any other nation. She leads easily in a marvelous way in distinguished enterprises.—Rev. F. C. Bruner, Methodist, Chicago, Ill.

SKATE SAILING.

Bids Fair to Become One of the Popular Winter Sports.

Skate sailing bids fair to become one of the most popular of winter sports in Northern Europe. The Germans have taken it up and have acquired a wonderful proficiency in this new and novel pastime.

The skating clubs of Berlin hold regular meets every winter on the Muggelsee—a large lake on the upper part of the river Spree. Here they have their skate sailing races or regattas, in which the competitors must not assist their progress by skating, but must rely wholly upon the sail to do the work.

SKATE SAILING.

The Presbyterian Church.

Rev. Dr. R. M. Patterson, after a study of reports, finds that more than half the Presbyterian churches of the country have a membership of less than 100 each. One-seventh of the Presbyterian and one-fifth of the Congregationalist have less than twenty-five each.

What has become of the old-fashioned boy who called his father "the old man?"

It is said that a colored man has a greater longing for straight hair than an old man has for youth.

Locomotor Ataxia and Paralysis Can be Cured.

These extreme nervous disorders were treated with wonderful success by the discoverer of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, previous to his discovery being offered to the public generally. This remedy is the only known specific in many diseases that, until recent years, were pronounced incurable. Here is the proof:

James Crocket, a sturdy old Scotchman living in Detroit, Mich, at 88 Montcalm St., was cured of Locomotor Ataxia by these pills. For many years he has been a chief engineer of one of those big passenger palace steamers plying upon the great lakes. This is a position of great responsibility and the anxiety causes a great nervous strain. Mr. Crocket says: "For fifteen years I watched the big engines and boilers without a single accident, and only noticed that I was getting nervous. Suddenly without warning I was taken sick, and was prostrated. I had the best of physicians but grew gradually worse. At a council of doctors, they said I had nervous prostration, and had destroyed my whole nervous system and would never recover. For three years I was unable to move from my bed. The doctor said I had locomotor ataxia, and would never be able to walk again.

"The pains and suffering I experienced during those years are almost indescribable. The friends that came to see me bid me good-bye when they left me and I was given up. The doctors said nothing more could be done. My wife kept reading to me, articles about Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. We finally decided to try them. The first box gave me relief. I continued to use them for about two years before I could get strength enough to walk. I am nearly seventy-five years old and there is not a man in this city that can kick higher or walk further than I can and to-day I owe my present good health to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People for they saved my life."—Detroit Evening News.

SHIPS AT SEA.

Oh, many ships have I at sea
That sailed away long years ago.
Some day they're coming back to me,
But when and how I cannot know.

Sometimes I wander on the shore,
And watch the far horizon dim,
Where vanished in those days of yore
My argosies so fleet and trim.

I scan with eager eyes the waves
That dance and sparkle in the light;
A vision fair my fond heart craves,
Alas, no sail is yet in sight!

Ofttimes I find upon the sand
A broken plank, a shattered spar,
A bent and rusty iron band—
Oh, voiceless tale of wrecks afar.

Then anxious fears crowd in my breast,
And veil the sunshine in the sky.
Shall thus my good ships end their quest?
Shall this their fate be by and by?

O friends with ships far out at sea,
That sailed away so long ago,
Some day they're coming back to thee,
But when and how we may not know.

Perchance with sails all rent and soiled,
Battered and bruised thy ships may be,
Of beauty and grace they may be despoiled,
Heavy and slow they may come to thee.

But come they morning, noon or night,
With flying colors or broken mast,
Our hearts will cry with a thrill of delight,
"Thank God that our ships have come in at last!"
—Boston Transcript.

BLUNDERING INTO MATRIMONY.

MRS. CRAMER, a wealthy young widow, lived in a style of simple elegance in a desirable quarter of the city. Her personal attendant, Susie Moore, was young, pretty and coquettish, with half a score of lovers at her heels, so that it is not to be wondered at that she was at times absent-minded and giddy.

Mrs. Cramer had gone out calling and Susie was doing two things at once. She was reading for the twentieth time a declaration of love she had received that morning and dusting a marble-top table that stood in the center of the room. An ominous crash which followed an unlucky whisk of her duster caused her to drop both the broom and the letter and exclaim:

"My goodness!"

On the carpet lay the fragments of a costly porcelain cup, a valued gift of the dear departed! Instant dismissal was the least she could expect in case of detection, and how could detection be avoided? No one else had access to the apartment, and there wasn't a cat on the premises.

But Susie was a girl of resources. A bright idea struck her and she ran to the back yard, snatched up a stone twice as large as a hen's egg, and dashed it through one of the panes of a rear window. Then returning to the parlor she picked up the stone and laid it among the pieces of the broken cup.

"But will that look right?" she ejaculated. "People don't throw stones through windows for nothing, and this being a back window, why—I have it!"

Her love letter lay at her feet. It had neither address nor signature, though well she knew whence it came. Catching up the missive and the missile, she hastily wrapped the one around the other, securing the parcel with a thread, and placed it amid the ruins.

Having finished her work, Susie closed the apartment and took good care not to be there when her mistress returned.

If Mrs. Cramer was vexed when she saw her broken cup and window, she was indignant when she came to investigate the cause.

"Who can have dared to take such a liberty?" she exclaimed, crumpling the paper in her hand; but she had scarcely asked the question when a dark suspicion took possession of her.

The damaged window not only overlooked her own back yard but the garden of an adjoining proprietor, a gentleman passionately devoted to horticulture, and Mrs. Cramer had occasionally busied herself for a few minutes in looking out upon his labors. The two had often exchanged glances, but never the slightest token of recognition. She had thought him a proper man, and he had sometimes lingered a little longer at his work than he probably would have done had the bright eyes of the widow been absent.

To suspect was to resolve, and, instantly tying up the stone in the letter, as she had found them, she walked to the window, and with all her might hurled back the hated message beyond the enemy's confines and at once retreated.

The innocent and unsuspecting neighbor, who chanced to be stooping out of sight digging weeds in the midst of the shrubbery, startled by the sound of what might be some meteoric body whizzing past in dangerous proximity to his head, raised himself just in time to catch a glimpse of the widow's receding figure.

But judge of his surprise as his eyes fell on the strange object which had barely missed knocking him down. With a trembling hand he undid the parcel, and, as he read it, his heart fluttered worse than Susie's had done in the morning.

The fact is, he had long been in love with the widow and had secretly sighed for an opportunity to tell her so, but to receive an unequivocal declaration from her—that was a little more than he had ever dared to hope. Some fastidious people might think such a proceeding indelicate, but the widow had evidently taken pity on his backwardness; besides, wasn't it leap year? True, her grammar might have been better, and her spelling was, to say the least, indifferent. But then he wasn't partial to literary ladies. Domesticity was what he wanted, and the widow was the picture of that. The note said something about not forgetting 6 o'clock. No, he wouldn't forget it. And he didn't.

At 6 o'clock sharp Elijah Rogers presented himself at Mrs. Cramer's door and was admitted by Susie.

"Tell your mistress," he said, "that a gentleman desires to see her."

"Please walk in," invited Susie.

The fair widow was prompt in making her appearance.

"Mrs. Cramer, I am Mr. Rogers—Elijah Rogers—your neighbor," said the caller, arising and introducing himself, with some nervousness and a heightened color.

The widow bowed stiffly, for in Mr. Rogers, though better dressed and of course better looking than she had ever seen him in his garden, she recognized immediately the ruthless trespasser who had broken her window, smashed her china, and been guilty of other acts against her peace and dignity.

"I scarcely know, madam," Mr. Rogers began, after a painful pause, "how to preface what I am about to say, but the note——"

"That, indeed, requires explanation!" exclaimed the widow.

"And yet I had flatered myself that it was sufficiently explicit," returned Mr. Rogers, somewhat disconcerted.

"Sufficiently explicit, no doubt," conceded Mrs. Cramer. "But the motive——"

"Do not say it was to deceive," interposed the caller.

"And the method chosen," cried the widow; "perfectly unheard of——"

"Whatever others may think," said Mr. Rogers, "between us two it can never be misinterpreted."

And Mr. Rogers told his love—told it so much better than the stray note could have done that the widow would have wondered how much his tongue was mightier than his pen had she been in any mood for such comparisons.

She and Mr. Rogers have now been married many years, but whether they ever discovered how the broken cup first broke the ice between them is more than I can tell.—New York Evening World.

QUEER STORIES

The egg-plant is a native of Asia, Africa and South America.

Kissing is unknown to the Australian aborigines, the Maoris, Papuans and Eskimo.

Among the Kols of Central India a sham fight always accompanies a wedding ceremony.

Suicide at one time was very common among the Brahmins of India, who held the body in contempt, regarding it merely as a covering for the soul.

Census-taking is Japan is simple, but the results are utterly untrustworthy. The houses are counted, and an average of five persons is allowed for each house.

The Papuans of the Malay coast of New Guinea are still in the most primitive state. They are wholly unacquainted with metals, and make their weapons of stone, bones and wood.

The laws of Mexico provide that a Mormon who wishes to take a second wife must present a certificate, signed by his first help-meet, to the effect that she is willing; and he must also have the express consent of the second wife and her parents.

A singular custom prevails among the Tartars or Kurds. If a man loses his cattle or other property, he pours a little brown sugar into a piece of colored cloth, ties it up, and carries one such parcel to each of his friends and acquaintances. In return he is presented, according to circumstances, with a cow, or sheep, or a sum of money.

A regular slave-mart still exists in many country districts of Finlan. Once a year such paupers, lunatics, and aged people of each parish as cannot support themselves are put up at public auction, and consigned to those families or farmers who will board them at the lowest price offered by the parish authorities. The helpless creatures are made to work as much as possible by their owners, who have the right to chastise them.

A Rural Sherlock Holmes.

"Gentlemen," began the proprietor of the only hotel at Basswood corners, "I've run this here institution for over thirty years. It's given me a first-rate chance to study human nater. An' now, in some respects, I think I'm a sort of Sherlock Holmes. I've had married couples come here in all stages of their matrimonial careers, from the blushin', cooin' things that hain't got the rice off of 'em yet to the couples where the man lets the woman carry most of the baggage, an' I tell ye, gentlemen, I can tell purty straight how long a couple has been married by watchin' the husband get his wife a drink of water."

"Go ahead," we said. "What's your discovery?"

"Well, when the tender young honeymooners come here, an' the feller gets the bride a drink of water, if there's any left in the glass after she gets through, why, he drinks it. If the couple has been married a year or so the feller will throw out the water that his wife leaves in the glass and get himself some fresh. Ain't that purty straight?"—Judge.

Dried bananas are now being exported from Queensland. They are intended as a substitute for raisins in British puddings.

THE PEOPLE OF SAMOA

BEAUTIES OF LIFE IN THE KINGDOM ON THE SEA.

The Inhabitants Are Happy, Love Fun, Are Hospitable to Strangers, Never Worry, and Are Splendid Fighters When Forced to It.

The recent difficulty in the Samoan Islands has turned public attention to that quarter of the Pacific, and we begin to wonder what kind of people live there. First of all, as everybody knows, there are foreigners, that is English, German, French and Americans, but the chief interest centers in the native Samoans.

In color the Samoans are the lightest, in physique the most perfect and imposing as well as the most graceful of the Pacific Islanders. In disposition they are the most gentle, and in manners the most attractive, while mentally and morally they are much the superior of their neighbors. Their color varies through shades ranging from a dark brown to a light copper, and occasionally to a shade of olive, which is exceedingly pretty. Their hair is straight, coarse and black, although one daily meets a number of bleached red-heads, artificially produced by the application of coral lime, which is used to stiffen the hair so that it will more easily stand erect—a style greatly admired. The hair is generally worn short, combed upward toward the crown, and receives frequent and liberal applications of cocoanut oil. Varieties of adornment prevail according to the fancy of the individual; these usually express themselves in the use of flowers and leaves, which are twined into wreaths and garlands and worn with becoming effect.

Hospitality is a part of Samoan religion, politeness one of their chief characteristics, and a dishonest act is the exception. Food and shelter are vouchsafed to every one entering their homes or villages, and the stranger has but to consult his own wishes when he is ready to depart.

The Samoans are a joyous, fun-loving people, and under the slightest pretext for an excuse they indulge their buoyant natures in singing and dancing. The only industry engaged in by the people, aside from fishing, collecting copra, planting taro, and cultivating fruit, in the making of tapa, or cloth, from the inner bark of the paper mulberry tree, and since the introduction of cotton prints among them its production is gradually increasing.

COURT HOUSE AT APIA.

While the Samoans are not a warlike people, they are good fighters when forced to fight. The distinguishing feature of their warfare is that after they have slain their antagonists they cut off their heads and bring them home as trophies of their victory. They do this on much the same principle as the American Indian in days gone by prided himself in the number of scalps he could string to his belt, or as the American of to-day brings home a captured flag. They have an inborn hatred of foreigners, and only make friends with them when they think they can profit by doing so or when they fear the superior power of the foreigner. They have had almost continual civil war for the past twenty-five or thirty years. For many years the reigning dynasty has been that of the Malietoas. Malietoa Laupepa was the greatest king in Samoa history. He was deposed several times, and as often was reinstated on the throne. The present king is Maletoa Tanus, but he is having great difficulty, owing to the treachery and treason of Mataafa, a firebrand who represents an old rebellious faction that for many years was headed by a rebel chief, Tamasese, and who has been urged on and assisted by the Germans, who hope that once they have him on the throne they will be able to do anything they please with him. The Germans have always been opposed to Malietoas because the latter have had the sympathy and support of the English and American people and governments.

MEN PROMINENT IN THE SAMOAN TROUBLE.

An Old Oil Clock.

An interesting specimen of the old oil clock used in the seventeenth century was shown at the recent exhibition in Berlin. This particular clock consists of a tube of glass in the outer receiving frame, on which the hours from 8 in the morning until 6 in the evening are indicated. The glass tube is filled with oil, and the wick in the receptacle consumes each hour just a certain portion of it, which can be seen by the numbers on the outer frame, and the time of day accordingly. Of course, this oil clock never had a reputation for accuracy, but in those days there were no trains or steamships, and the doctrine that time is money had not been propounded.

Kaiser a Landscape Gardener.

The last new passion of the versatile Kaiser is ornamental gardening. He has taken in hand a wholesale transformation of the famous Thiergarten; the trees and bushes between the Bellevue allee and the Louisen-Insel are being cut down and grubbed out, and trees are being planted in groups at various spots, according to a plan sketched out by the Kaiser, who intends to give the place more of the pleasant character of an English park." The carrying out of the imperial plan, says a Berlin contemporary, will take at least five years.

The manner in which New York papers talk about people is as interesting and candid as private gossip in the West.

THE KAISER'S GAME DID NOT WORK.

German Attempt to Expand in the Samoan Islands Promptly Frustrated by Uncle Sam and John Bull.

THEY LOST NO TIME.

Announcement of an Engagement Was an Important News Item.

In a Milwaukee newspaper office the telephone rang loud and long the other night, or rather, in the early hours of the morning. It was the "dog watch," most of the workers having gone home, and but one member of the staff was on guard and on the alert for anything from a murder to a fire. It was about 3 a. m. when the "dog watch" was called to the telephone to answer an imperative summons.

"Hello!" said a voice. "Is it too late to get something into to-morrow's paper?"

"Not if it's important," was the reply.

"Oh, it is," was the assuring response.

The reporter rushed for a pad of paper and a pencil, screwed his ear to the receiver again and said:

"All right. Fire away there."

The voice was heard again, this time tremulous with emotion.

"The engagement of Miss —— to Mr. —— is announced."

The wrathful explosion at the newspaper end of the line was picturesque and prolonged. After a choice assortment of profanity in an aside the query went back: "Why didn't you send in such stuff earlier in the day?"

"But I couldn't," said the voice apologetically. "You see, it just happened."

ONLY WOMAN ENGINEER.

A Cleveland Girl Who Enjoys a Unique Distinction.

Miss Florence Caldwell, of Cleveland, Ohio, has gained the distinction of being the only woman civil engineer in America. Miss Caldwell is an exceptionally well educated girl. She attended Adelbert College, graduated from the Cleveland School of Art, won high degrees at the Ohio Wesleyan College and finally entered the School of

MISS FLORENCE CALDWELL.

Mines of the State of Colorado at Golden. She was the only female student in that institution, and after four years graduated with a certificate of civil engineer. No other woman in America holds such a paper. Miss Caldwell is a daughter of Judge Caldwell, a prominent Ohio jurist.

Why Jenner Wore a Guinea.

Sir William Jenner, the Queen's physician, wore at his watch chain a guinea piece which bore a pleasant little history. One day he found among his patients in his consulting room a humble carpenter. On remarking to the man that his disease had, through neglect of treatment, made great progress, he received the following reply:

"I have been waiting to see you for three years, sir." "Why, my man?" queried the physician. "Couldn't you afford to come sooner?" "Oh, yes," answered the carpenter; "but I could not get a gold guinea piece anywhere; and I heard you'd take nothing else."

Sir William wears that guinea on his chain, but though he completely cured the patient within eight months, he never took another fee from the poor fellow who had tried so hard to find that guinea, and had waited so patiently to consult him.

The office seldom seeks the man, but the officer very often does.

QUEER BURIAL PLACES.

Strange Requests Made by Eccentric Decedents.

The most extraordinary of all burial requests was that of the celebrated Jeremy Bentham. The great philanthropist and exponent of the doctrine of utilitarianism, dying in 1832, left directions that his body should be dissected and that the skeleton should be put together, and, after being clothed in his old vestments, should be seated in a sort of glass house on wheels. The first part of the program was performed by his faithful disciple, Dr. Southwood Smith, who, in endeavoring to preserve the head, deprived the face of all expression. Seeing this would not do for exhibition purposes, Dr. Smith had a model made in wax by a distinguished French artist, who succeeded in producing a most admirable likeness. The skeleton was then stuffed out to fit Bohemian's clothes and the wax likeness fitted to the trunk. The figure was placed, seated on the chair in which he usually sat, with one hand holding the walking stick which was his constant companion in life, called by him (like a dog) "Dapple." The whole was inclosed in a mahogany case with a glass front, covered by folding doors, and presented to University College, where it can be seen in the south gallery of the college museum.

The strange request of Anthony Ettericke, who was a prominent lawyer and once Recorder of Poole, is noteworthy. Having some cause of offense against the people of Wimborne, England, in which town he lived, he declared that he was to be buried in a consecrated spot, but not above nor below ground, not in the church nor out of it. To make certain that this was done he got permission to build a coffin into the wall of Wimborne minster, so that it is half in the church and half out, half above the ground and half below it. To do this a special arch had to be made, and for the repair of this arch and the coffin Anthony Ettericke gave to the church a sum of 20 shillings from a farm. To bury him the wall of the church level with the pavement was opened and the body deposited in the coffin as described. It is of slate and is emblazoned with many coats of arms. There are two dates on it—1691 and 1703—one over the other, so as to render both almost unreadable. He was fully convinced that he should die in 1691 and had his coffin made and the date placed upon it. But he did not die till 1703, and so the second date was cut over the first.

An art gallery seems a queer place in which to bury bodies, and probably few of the inhabitants of Dulwich are aware that Dulwich College picture gallery contains three bodies—the bodies of the three people to whom that collection of pictures owes its existence. Noll Joseph Desenfans was a native of Douai, in France, but settled in London, first as a teacher of languages. He became possesses of a valuable picture by Claude, which he sold to George III. for 1,000 guineas, and so became a picture dealer. Then Stanislaus, King of Poland, commissioned him to purchase pictures to form a national gallery for Poland, and in this work Desenfans was helped by his friend, Sir Francis Bourgeois, R. A. When the Polish King was overthrown the collection of pictures came back to Desenfans, who on his death left his pictures to Bourgeois, who decided to hand them over to some public body for the benefit of the public. Accident directed his attention to Dulwich College, to which he bequeathed his pictures. The bequest was conditional. He wished a mausoleum to be erected in the gallery, where his own remains and those of his friends M. and Mme. Desenfans, might repose. The candition was accepted.

Tender Recollections.

The balloon was tugging at its rope and bouncing about clumsily in the puffs of wind. A widow stood regarding it with streaming eyes. She was alone, but a crowd gathered about her, attracted by her untimely tears. She sobbed for ten minutes, while the crowd restrained themselves, but at last an old gentleman, whose long white hair and saintly face declared his belief that he was privileged to thrust himself into anybody's business, stepped forward and said:

"Madam, why do you weep? Why, oh, these tears?"

The woman snuffled loudly and then replied:

"It's the balloon."

"But," queried the old gentleman, "why does the spectacle of a balloon cause you to weep? Did a loved son once perish as an aeronaut?"

"No," replied the weeper, "it wasn't a son—it was my husband."

"Ah, your husband was killed while ballooning?"

"No, he wasn't; my husband died in his bed, but he weighed twenty-one stone, and that jumping balloon reminds me of just how Henry looked the last time I saw him a-dancing. His figure was like that!" And the widow dissolved in a new burst of tears.—Judy.

Russia's "Spanish" Navy.

The Reichswehr gives an almost comic account of the Russian naval maneuvers which were held in the Baltic recently. Every ship engaged in the operations was not only short-handed, but such men as they had were perfectly untried hands, incapable of performing the most ordinary duties, and causing a large number of mishaps by their bungling carelessness. There was a special lack of engineers and firemen, to an extent, indeed, which endangered the safety of the ships. The allowance of ammunition which had ben placed on each vessel was absurdly insufficient, and rendered any kind of systematic gun practice impossible. In the auxiliary squadron of thirty ships no less than twenty broke down so completely as to be entirely hors de combat. "This," remarks the Reichswehr, "is the fleet of the power which desires to dispute England's supremacy of the seas. Anything more ridiculous can hardly be conceived. If this squadron was in the least degree representative of the Russian navy Russia's competition for the supremacy of the world may be regarded by England as a negligible quantity."

The Duplex Questioner.

The treasurer of a theater wrestles with many phases of humanity, all of which are more or less interesting. Hugh Quarles, the Bijou's treasurer, claims to have had an entirely new one in the person of a duplex question asker. Late Saturday afternoon a gentleman stepped up to the box office and asked if Mr. Aronson was in.

"He is in Chicago," replied Mr. Quarles.

"He is in Chicago? When do you expect him back?"

"To-morrow, sir."

"To-morrow? He won't be in before?"

"Not until Sunday," said the treasurer.

"Not until Sunday? Well, have you any good seats for to-night?"

"Yes, sir."

"Yes? Are they front seats?"

"Fifth row," answered the treasurer.

"Fifth row? Can't you give me seats in the second?"

"No, sir."

"No?" Are they aisle seats?"

"Aisle seats," answered the treasurer.

"Aisle seats? On the side or in the center?"

"Right side," said the treasurer, rather impatiently.

"Right side? Can't you give me center?"

"Not center, sir."

"Not center? Have you the first row in the balcony?"

"Second row, we have center."

"Second row? How much are they?"

"Three dollars, please."

"Three dollars?"

As the treasurer handed the gentleman $2 change out of $5 the duplex question asker said:

"Thank you."

By this time Mr. Quarles had acquired the duplex habit and said, thoughtlessly: "Thank you—thank God."—New York Telegram.

"Parson Tough."

A story of Hobson's early days at Annapolis shows that the lads who made heroes are not always the reckless ones of the company, but rather the youths who have already made their companions respect them for high moral qualities.

Young Hobson's loyalty to the Christianity he had learned at home won for him at Annapolis the name of the parson. One day his companions discovered that the parson possessed qualities not to be despised.

With the rest of his class he was taking a swimming lesson. He was far out along the rope in the breakers, so far out that life depended on his grasp of the rope. He pressed out farther still, doing his very best.

Then, as mischance would have it, he found he was not alone. He met a classmate coming in, clinging for life to the rope. Safe passage for both was almost an impossibility. One must yield to the other, but which?

It was a trying moment for the youths, but it did not take long for Hobson to decide. He gave way to his classmate, keeping the merest touch on the rope; but somehow, at the moment of passing, even this hold gave way, and he fell into the breakers.

The boy left on the rope got in and sent aid to Hobson, who was brought to shore—dead, as all supposed; but he was not dead, and in time he revived.

"Nobody but Hobson could have come out of that alive," said his classmates, and from that time they changed his name. It was a parson still, but it had now become "Parson Tough."—Youth's Companion.

Demons When They Fight.

You would hardly believe that moles, clumsy, almost blind, little beasts that they are, become perfect demons when they quarrel. No one knows what they quarrel about, but if they once start fighting one has to die. This will keep on in the presence of any number of spectators, hanging on to one another like bulldogs, and burying their enormously strong jaws and teeth in one another's flesh. Hedge-hogs, another type of the quiet, inoffensive animal, not only fight, but always to the death, and when one is killed, the other generally devours him. Hares, on the other hand, are proverbially the most timid of creatures. Yet they can fight. A fight between two hares is a ludicrous sight, as they skip and jump over one another. But a blow from the hind legs of a hare is no joke to his opponent. Among birds, robins are the most pugnacious. More than one case could be quoted of two robins so frantically set on killing one another as to have allowed themselves to be picked up in the hands of a looker-on, and there have lain, with beak and claws deep buried in one another's plumage.

Short Lesson in English.

A tiresome caller who had spent the evening at the home of a friend, a young lady, and had devoted nearly all the time to a description of a trip to Europe, from which he had recently returned, said to her, as he rose to go:

"I beg pardon for being so talkative. I fear my long story about my adventures abroad has entertained you but illy."

"On the contrary," she replied, politely, "it has entertained me quite welly."—Youth's Companion.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.,

FRIDAY, APRIL 7 1899

In the Dreyfus case now pending on the question of revision before the Court of Cassation, which is the highest tribunal of France, the French Republic, and especially the General Staff of the French army, is practically on trial. It has evoked much discussion and has excited much interest in the United States, not merely because of its revelations of personal dishonor and its disclosures of deep-seated injustice in French jurisprudence when the Government is interested, but also for the reason that its actual merits have been obscured through race and religious prejudices. Dreyfus, a lieutenant in the French army, was convicted in 1894 and sent to the Ile du Diable, where he has en lured great totrure, for having written an unsigned letter, containing a list of secret documents in the French War Office, for the benefit of the German empire. On his trial five experts were examined as to the handwriting of this letier, three of whom testified against him and two for him. The inherent weakness of this kind of evidence has been repeatedly declared in the United States and Great Britain, but his conviction rested on that quality of proof, which has since lost most of its assumed value. Ouiside of France and with even greater intensity among millions of the French people, embracing statesmen, writers and soldiers of the highest standing, belief in his innocence became so general and the resentment against his persecutors so vociferous that, after every method of avoiding further inquiry had been exhausted, the government unwillingly yielded to the pressure and the pending investigation was instituted. The Court of Cassation is now to determine whether or not the conviction should stand. It is possible, although highly improbable, that Dreyfus is guilty but it is beyond argument in any country where the English language is spoken that his guilt has never been legally proved and that his conviction and punishment represent tyranny and corruption to a degree absolutely incompatible with the maintenance of republican institutions. Our traditional sympathy with France, our love of self government and our respect for the Court of Cassation inspire the hope that publicity and law may cleanse the impurities in the French military service and that justice will now be thoroughly if tardily vindicated.

It may well be said that the Lord has been good to California this year. Despite all the evil prophecies and all the ominous signs and portents, it looks as though this State would have a great year. Business men who have traveled extensively and who observe wherever they travel, state that there never has been a time when she has had such a splendid outlook. The cattlemen are already beginning to feel the effects of the big year. The prospect for the grain crop in California was never better than it is just at the present moment, and the outlook for war in other countries would lead one to believe that the prices also will be big. The fruit crop prospect of the State is great and, unfortunately for other places, it is rendered all the greater because of the fact that the crops in the East have been injured by blizzards and other elemental disturbances. The stock on hand of canned and dried fruits has been exhausted and that of itself has put much money into circulation through the canneries, while the grower is assured of an increased home market this year. A good supply of water for the year has been laid up by the rains and snows in the mountains, particularly in Southern California, where irrigation is necessary. A plentiful supply of water also will give a marked impetus to mining all through California This is a double blessing for it will be remembered that minfng had to be very generally stopped in California last year because of the woeful lack of water. All in all California is entitled to a Thanksgiving Day right now in this gentle Springtime.

Many instances of heroism are reported from Manila, showing that the American volunteer soldier is as quick as the regular to brave danger in the rescue of a comrade. One of the finest exploits was that of two men of the Montana regiment and a steward who crawled out under heavy fire and brought in on a litter wagon a badly wounded comrade. The wagon was so badly riddled with shot that it was worthless, but not one of the three was hit. It is such deeds as this that raise the gallantry of a whole body of troops and give them a spirit that nothing can withstand.

Over one hundred poems were sent to Rudyard Kipling during his long sickness. That he is now safe on the road to recovery proves the wisdom of his physicians in preventing the reading of these "originals" to the prostrate poet. Kipling will no doubt fully realize the weight of the white man's burden when he comes to settle his bill with the doctors.

When a Filipino will not fight Aguinaldo has him killed, and when he will fight he is likely to run against an American soldier with a gun. The only safe course of the Filipino would seem to be to take to the wood. Th s he is trying to do, it is evident, but while the army of Aguinaldo is disintegrating, there may be trouble in apprehending the fragments.

There seems to be no doubt that the Pope is very ill. When he dies one of intellectual lights of the age will have been extinguished.

To Give Up Every Vice.

"Well, sir," demanded Horatio Bullion, "what particular reason have you to offer for asking me to let you have my daughter Gladys?"

"I—I love her, and she loves me," Reginald Biddlethwaite replied.

"Oh, of course," the blunt old magnate retorted. "I've heard that song from half a dozen others. That's to be taken for granted. But what other qualifications have you?"

"I must confess," the trembling young man answered, "that I am not rich, but I can truthfully say that I have no expensive habits. I don't drink. I don't gamble. I don't chew tobacco. I don't smoke. I don't"—

"Hold on!" the millionaire broke in. "That's enough! You'll do. Your board and clothes won't cost much more than the gas you've been burning lately. What I object to is supporting fellows like my other three sons-in-law, who have all the faults you say you have not. I don't mind furnishing the husbands of my daughters with the necessaries of life, but I do hate to have to settle the bills for their luxuries. Now, there is just one other point I want to have settled before I give my consent."

"What is that?" Mr. Biddlethwaite eagerly asked.

"Promise me that you will not start a newspaper. The others have all tried it, and I can't stand many more such experiences."

Reginald's promise made three hearts happy.—Cleveland Leader.

Vaseline Pancakes.

Cæsar's creek, on the Florida coast, was named after a famous old pirate called Black Cæsar, whose profession added to the risks of marine insurance. After the pirates the Florida wreckers came, of whom H. A. Willoughby, in his "Across the Everglades," tells this story:

A large steamer was stranded on the reef not far from Cape Florida. No sooner had she struck than the news spread rapidly along the shore. The people for 20 miles around gathered on the beach opposite the stranded steamer. Among them were a number of Indians from the Everglades, who chanced to be down there and knew what a "wreck" meant to the wreckers.

The steamer, loaded with an assorted cargo, began to break up, and barrels, cases and boxes drifted gradually ashore. There were casks of wine, boxes of soap, cases of bottles of wine and iron and a hundred other articles. The Indians seized upon the wine and soon were in a condition that allowed the white men to secure the more valuable prizes.

The squaws struck a bonanza in a case of vaseline. They thought it a new variety of the white man's frying fat and, starting a fire, fried pancakes in it. What a dish—pancakes a la Seminole!

Messages by Vibration.

Curiously enough, the fact appears, according to a recent traveler among the Indians of Catuquinarn, between the rivers Embrya and Embyrasu, that these people have long employed a wireless telephony, but rather after the order of unwritten science.

It is made by digging a hole in the ground inside a house and laying the bottom with coarse sand, well piled. On this is laid a wooden drum or hollow cylinder of wood, half filled with fine sand and layers of broken wood, bone and powdered mica—the upper part of the cylinder, which is empty, rising above the floor of the hut and closed first by leather, then by wood, and lastly by india rubber. Outside, the cylinder is packed round with fragments of wood, leather and resins, and covered with hard rubber at the level of the soil.

To use this peculiar apparatus the drum is struck by a wooden hammer, and the vibration is evidently transmitted through the soil. The answer is heard in the drum, which acts as a resonator, and messages are thus sent over 1,500 yards from house to house.

For Insomnia.

A curious remedy for sleeplessness is used by the inhabitants of the Samoan islands. They confine a snake in a hollow bamboo, and the hissing sound emitted by the reptile is said to quickly induce slumber.

Services for Sunday, April 9th 1899:

All services announced below will be conducted by Rev. E. W. Van Deventer, D. D., Superintendent of the Nevada Mission.

Lone Pine—Saturday evening, April 8th, at 7:30 o'clock, lecture. Sunday morning at 11 o'clock, preaching service followed by the administration of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper.

Georges Creek—Sermon at 2:30 in the afternoon.

Independence—Sunday evening at 7:30 o'clock, preaching service followed by the administration of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper. Tuesday evening at 7:30 o'clock there will be a lecture, subject to be announced on Sunday evening.

The Sunday-schools will meet at the regular hours.

All are most cordially invited to attend these meetings.

JOHN J. PARDEE, Pastor.

SUPERIOR COURT PROCEEDINGS.

Hon. Walter A. Lamar, Judge.

THURSDAY, April 6, 1899.

Estate of E. Chenot, deceased—Return and account of sales of personal property approved.

W. H. Wells of Round Valley was a visitor in town this week.

Those who have tried the trout fishing this season say it is good.

Hon. T. B. Rickey left for Carson Saturday after a month spent in looking after his interests here.

Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Austin leave to-day for Los Angeles. Mrs. Austin's health is poor and she expects to remain some time.

Mrs. N. J. Cooley accompanied her husband to Independence, where he is attending the session of the Board of Supervisors.

Schober's big team struck town Tuesday. Olds of Round Valley is shipping five and a half tons of goat wool to Mojave by the team.

Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Given left yesterday morning for a pleasure trip to points of interest in Southern California. They will be absent about a month.

The book-social at Lone Pine Sarurday evening was a decided success. The first prize was won by Fred Stewart, and the booby ptize was shared by Mrs. Edwards and Mr. Carroll.

J. C. Roeper received a choice lot of green vegetables from Sacramento lately, and the rapidity with which they vanished from the shop makes it evident that we are all craving green feed.

The Johnson brothers and McGinnis have struck a bonanza in the shape of a 12 foot ledge of forty dollar rock of the honey-comb description. The ledge can be traced with the eye some 2,000 feet. It is located in the hills east of Citrus.

The Easter Song Servire at the M. E. Church was thoroughly enjoyed by the congregation. The church was prettily decorated, notwithstanding the fact that the calla lilies sent to the pastor were delayed by the wreck on the Central Pacific.

Supervisor Stewart received a letter yesterday morning announcing the sad news of the death of Miss Mollie Stevens at Oakland on Monday last. The deceased lived in this county for upwards of thirty years and was held in the highest esteem. Her death was unexpected and is the cause of sincere grief to a large circle of friends.

A party consisting of the following named persons arrived at Independence last Monday evening from San Francisco, traveling from Reno in Mr. Yerington's private car: Mrs. N. Rhine and her son, Mr. Henry Rhine and Mr. and Mrs. Otto Belau. Mr. Belau returns to San Francisco to-morrow while Mrs. Belau will remain here for an indefinite period, as she is in ill health and seems to be benefited by the change.

Park Barnes was in town this week, and reports as follows of the claims he and E. T. Anderson have located in the Inyo range east of Citrus. They sent samples of the rock to be thoroughly tested and as a result got an average on the lot of $60 per ton. There are two strong ledges averaging three feet in width as far as worked. The quartz shows some free gold and considerable sulphurets. They intend to ship a carload to Dayton soon for milling. There is a great body of ore in sight, and the owners may well feel encouraged at the prospect.

District Fairs.

The Fair appropriations passed the Legislature all right and were duly signed by the Governor. When the list of bills which received the Governor's signature were published in the daily papers, many who read it came to the conclusion that the appropriations had again been cut off, but their fears were groundless. The fairs were provided for in the General Appropriation bill, which is the measure in which a majority of the State institutions are named and amounts fixed for their sustenance durthe two years. There need be no further worry on that score. The sum of $79,500 is to be divided among the district organizations. The basis of the apportionment is the population and assessed property of each district. Our share is $1,800.

Mining Items.

Dave Holland returned Monday from a trip to Ballarat, and left Wednesday for Beveridge where he has five men at work on the Guadalupe mine. He gives the following items from the Panamint country:

The Harrison mill is running in Pleasant canyon. Two miles above the Harrison mill is the Dover mine. The mine and mill, owned by Mr. Godmark, employ forty men. Chas. Anthony has 250 tons of $50 rock out. In the same canyon John G. Quinn has a complete cyanide plant and is working tailings profitably.

Jack Curron is at work at Old Panamint.

North of Tuber Canyon Al Williams has three 8-hour shifts at work on a 12-foot ledge of $15 ore.

Louis de Tourniel is still shipping copper ore from Snows canyon by Mc Sweeny's and McLean's teams.

Fifteen men are employed at the Lane mine at Darwin. It is reported that three copper mines near Darwin have been sold.

The Sheep Bills.

The "Sheep Bills" introduced in the Legislature for the purpose of limiting the sheep license tax to 2 cents a head were defeated. Senator Davis had the amendment to the County Government bill, providing for such a limitation, stricken out, and then the County Government bill failed to pass. The special bill to amend the present County Government bill was also defeated, Assemblyman Mack making a vigorous fight against it. The people of this county are greatly indebted to Senator Davis and Assemblyman Mack for the exertions they have made in carrying through the measures os so much importance to this county particularly, and to the people of all the counties in their districts, the Yosemite-Tioga road so ably engineered by Senator Davis being of very great importance to all the people of Eastern California and Western Nevada, and the defeat of legislation looking to an interference with the right of our Supervisors in the matter of fixing licenses for the transaction of sheep business, a matter in which Alpine and Inyo are also vitally interested, and both gentlemen have the warm thanks of our people for the good work they have performed, and both looked well to the interests of the State at large.—Chronicle—Union.

OUR POLICY OF TERRITORIAL EXPANSION.

Extreme annexationists are advocating the addition of Canada to this country, and think it can be accomplished in a peaceful manner without exciting a quarrel with England. Such grave questions call for the wisest statesmanship, just as dyspepsia, constipation, liver and kidney diseases and malaria call for a thoroughly reliable remedy like Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. No experimenting should be done with untried medicines when an old established preparation is to be had.

Salt Rheum, Hands World Crack Open

"I cannot say too much in praise of Hood's Sarsaparilla, as it has worked wonders in my case. I was afflicted with salt rheum on my hands for many years. I tried many remedies but did not obtain relief. My hands would crack open and bleed profusely and the pain was terrible to bear. Since taking Hood's Sarsaparilla the flesh has healed and my hands are as smooth as a farmer's hands could be. I have recommended Hood's Sarsaparilla to my friends, and as far as I can learn it has proved satisfactory." LLOYD B. CHASE, Pottsville, Mass.

THE OPEN DOOR.

PRESIDENT LINCOLN had just issued a call for more troops, and volunteers from every direction responded with the unhesitating alacrity of true patriots. Some of the States failed to furnish their full quota, however, and Iowa was among the delinquents. Then came the order for a draft, and the name of Hon. James Fisk of D—— headed the list of the drafted. This was no particular credit to his fellow townsmen, for in spite of his title (which, by the way, was a tribute to wealth only), a meaner, more miserly creature than James Fisk never lived upon this earth.

He was just in the prime of life, or would have been had he been less selfish, but little by little certain objectionable traits of character had left their imprint upon his countenance until he appeared prematurely aged. Hence the sobriquet of "Old Jim Fisk," which he was familiarly called by every man, woman and child—excepting on rare occasions when discretion was considered the better part of valor.

The Hon. James Fisk was a banker, a railroad magnate, and a real estate man combined. In fact, he had owned a large portion of the town in its early history, and he therefore considered himself of no small importance in the financial world at least. Like many another, he loved his money first, himself next and his country last, as well as least; though it is said that when he ran for United States Senator during the previous campaign, he made some thrillingly patriotic speeches, and apparently without the slightest compunction. In those days he was called "Old Sodom and Gomorrah," an appellation which he never quite outgrew.

James Fisk was not the type of a man who could conscientiously sing "America" or "The Star Spangled Banner," consequently he felt that personal insult had been directed to him when the President had the audacity to place his name with the rest of the common herd. Nevertheless, it was a case of compulsion, and he knew that he must either hire a substitute or go into the army himself. The former was not very easy to accomplish, as the majority of the poor men had already enlisted, and money, at such a time, was no inducement to the rich men.

He was not in an especially amiable mood, when at the close of an unsuccessful day spent in search of a substitute, he entered his office to attend to the afternoon mail. As he read the last letter a heavier scowl deepened upon his forehead and he exclaimed harshly:

"The young jackanapes need not think that he can fool with a hornet and not get stung. Extend their time, indeed! Why, the interest was due a month ago! I'll foreclose the mortgage to-morrow."

A new thought seemed to occur to him, for the muscles of the stern mouth relaxed; he smiled blandly, rubbed his hands together caressingly, and said:

"Mr. Fisk, you're a diplomat—a born diplomat. You're an honor to your country, but more particularly to yourself. If you can only manage this thing properly, you will be all right—yes, all right."

At the close of the foregoing soliloquy he filled out a telegraph blank as follows:

"Horace W. Packard, Carson City, Iowa—Have found a way to help you out. Come to D—— on first train.

"JAMES FISK."

The message was soon dispatched, and reached its destination just as Horace and his mother were sitting down to their evening meal.

"Old Moneybags is getting awfully considerate, all of a sudden; what do you suppose is back of it, mother?" asked the boy as he handed the telegram to her.

Mrs. Packard gave a sigh which belied her words, but she responded hopefully, "I don't know, dear, but we will trust that his heart has softened a little toward the widow and the fatherless."

"Don't you think you can go with me, mother? I believe Jones will give us passes, so you can offer no objection on that score; anyway, you need a change, for you look pretty tired these days."

And thus it was settled that Mrs. Packard was to spend the week with an old school friend, while her son attended to business matters.

Mr. Packard had been one of the first of Iowa's sons to lay down his life for his country. From the hour that his father had marched away, Horace had secretly cherished a desire to join the army. He knew that his years were against him; then, too, his mother's heart was so sore at the heavy blow which had fallen on their home nest as the result of the war, that he never mentioned the subject, and Mrs. Packard little dreamed of the great struggle that was going on in the mind of her boy.

How his heart swelled with patriotism the next day as he walked up Main street! All D—— was astir with the news of war, and a bugle was sounding the revelle. When he passed a squad of the drafted men in their gay uniforms, the sight was almost too much for him, the war fever was on him, and had it not been for the thoughts of his already bereaved mother Horace Packard would have gone at any cost.

An hour later he came out of the office of James Fisk with a determined look on his manly face, and it seemed as if he had grown an inch taller.

Mrs. Packard met him at the door, and affectionate greetings were exchanged. The boy tried to smile, but when he looked into his mother's eyes he made a miserable failure of it, and the tears welled up instead. They were as quickly dried and he said, "You see, mother, it is just like this. Fisk was going to foreclose the mortgage, but he says he will give you a clear title if I will go as his substitute. I can't bear to leave you, little mother, but I do want to go and fight for my father's country,"—and the boy's eyes flashed. Then he added quietly, "I should go sooner or later, anyway. This is our one opportunity to free our home from debt, and you will not say 'nay,' will you, mother mine?"

But Mrs. Packard sat as if she were petrified. At last her voice came to her, and all the mother love asserted itself as she clasped the stalwart lad in her arms and kissed him passionately. "Oh, my boy, my all, how can I let you go? What will mother do without you?"

* * * * * * *

"How old are you, my man?" asked the examining physician of Horace, later in the day?

"Seventeen, sir," responded the boy, promptly.

"Um! Um!" was the suggestive exclamation. This was followed by more questions. "I see, I see," said the old doctor. "Why didn't you add a year to it; that's what lots of them do. You'd have stood a better chance if you had."

Horace stretched himself to his full height, and the physician continued. "I don't need to ask you if you are strong, for your physique speaks for itself, but your age certainly stands in the way. Do you think you would be able to shoulder a musket all day?"

For reply Horace placed five chairs in a row, leaped over each in turn, then faced around, and vaulted over the entire group with one bound.

The physician smiled at the exhibition, but said, "Something of an athlete, my man; well, I think we will give you a trial."

* * * * * * *

When Horace entered the Hon. James Fisk's office his heart smote him painfully, for boy though he was, he saw a sight that is stamped upon his memory to this day.

The mother stood before the desk of the grim-faced man pleading for her boy; but the two elder people were so engrossed that they did not hear Horace enter.

"For God's sake, James Fisk, for the sake of the love you once professed to have for me, spare me the misery of sending my boy to the war. What is a paltry six hundred dollars to you? Foreclose the mortgage to-morrow, turn us in the street, but don't influence my child to sacrifice himself on the altar of love for me."

For an instant the woman thought that she caught a glimpse of feeling in the cold eyes, but it passed as quickly as it had come.

"Mrs. Packard," responded the metallic voice with staccato-like precision, "business is business. You are too late, for the contract is signed, and this day I have canceled the mortgage. Allow me to say, madam, that revenge, such as this, is sweet."

The woman gave him a swift sad look, her lips opened as if to speak, then she turned and left the office. That night the Hon. James Fisk was suddenly called to join the great majority where no proxy could take his place. He had evidently not left the office since his interview with Mrs. Packard, for the errand boy found him the next morning with his legal documents scattered about him. "Heart failure!" the doctor pronounced it, that convenient post-mortem phrase which covers a multitude of errors.

In the tightly closed hand was a miniature picture of a fair-faced girl—a pensive countenance—at that sweet time when she is "Standing with reluctant feet

Where the brook and river met,
Womanhood and childhood fleet."

"It must be the sister who died years ago," said Madam Grundy.

However, one person knew the truth of the matter, for on his desk was a note addressed to Mrs. Packard, and it read:

Friend Margaret: I have reconsidered my hasty words and have decided to go myself. Have destroyed the contract, and thus release the lad. (How like you he is!) Please keep your contract for the sake of auld lang syne. Obediently, J. L. FISK."

Collaborating in Soul-Saving.

"In the days of my early ministry,' said a well-known clergyman, "I thought it necessary to impress thoughts of salvation by everything I uttered.

"My first work was in a Western mining camp, and I had to remain over night at a rough hotel to wait for a stage to convey me to my destination. At the table a savage looking man said gruffly:

"'What might be your line, young feller?'

"'Saving souls,' I said solemnly.

"'Ugh,' was the only response.

"After supper, a coarsely dressed man approached me and said:

"'Pardner, let's make some kind o' dicker. We're in ther same line, an' thar ain't room fer both. Thar's a camp furder up the crick whar yo' could set up and do well.'

"'I think you are mistaken, my friend,' I said. 'I am a minister of the Gospel.'

"'Scuse me, parson; I was mistaken in yo'; I thought yo' was a cobbler.'"—Saturday Evening Post.

TO MRS. PINKHAM

From Mrs. Walter E. Budd, of Patchogue, New York.

MRS. BUDD, in the following letter, tells a familiar story of weakness and suffering, and thanks Mrs. Pinkham for complete relief:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I think it is my duty to write to you and tell you what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. I feel like another woman. I had such dreadful headaches through my temples and on top of my head, that I nearly went crazy; was also troubled with chills, was very weak; my left side from my shoulders to my waist pained me terribly. I could not sleep for the pain. Plasters would help for a while, but as soon as taken off, the pain would be just as bad as ever. Doctors prescribed medicine, but it gave me no relief.

"Now I feel so well and strong, have no more headaches, and no pain in side, and it is all owing to your Compound. I cannot praise it enough. It is a wonderful medicine. I recommend it to every woman I know."

Jungle Food and Jungle Poison.

Those who have traveled much through the damp jungles of India, such as the Terai, cannot have helped noticing the large amount of fungoid growth, both terrestrial and epiphytical, that presents itself, much of which is edible, but requires an intimate acquaintance with botany to determine between the poisonous and uninimical. What were not long since considered semisavage races on the northeast frontier are the best guides the uninitiated, however, can employ to distinguish the two classes. So close is the resemblance that it would be dangerous for the ignorant traveler to trust to his own unaided discrimination, and if the services of a human nomad are not available the fungi should be submitted to the equally an fait judgment of a tame monkey—a thing no traveler should be without.

The animal must be very closely watched when sitting in judgment, especial notice being taken of his countenance. If the specimen is poisonous, there is a decided look of disgust apparent, as the creature throws it from him, but if nonpoisonous it is torn into fragments, first smelled and then transferred to the mouth, in which case one may rest perfectly satisfied that it is edible, even though "jackoo" may not eat it. In no case will our remote connections make a mistake, nor, for that matter, will an elephant either. A spare elephant or two is also a handy thing to have among your luggage.—Indian Planters' Gazette.

The Larynx.

The larynx has been compared to a wind, a reed and a stringed instrument. The comparison of it to a violin gave rise to the not very accurate phrase "vocal cords," as the name of the two cushions which are its most prominent features. But no string so short as those "vocal cords" could produce a musical bass note. In fact, the comparison of the larynx to any instrument which produces only musical tones is inadequate, to begin with. There is no instrument but the larynx which produces both song and speech, and as those comparisons view the larynx merely as a producer of musical sounds we have no further concern with them at present. Besides, the voice can be trained for speech, elocution and oratory without a knowledge of the physiology of the larynx.

We have the power of adjusting the larynx; of varying the tension of its cords, cushions or ligaments, as they have been variously called. We can do these things without scientific technical knowledge of how they are done, without any knowledge at all of vocal physiology, and it is the work of the trainer of the voice to teach his pupils—or her pupils we may be allowed to say—how to do them. — Chambers' Journal.

The Boy and the Hare.

A pleasant story of the Duke of Devonshire comes from Chatsworth. He was strolling, gun in hand, through one of his own fields near Baslow when he started a hare, which he shot, and was going to pick it up when a small boy jumped out of a neighboring hedge and warned him off. "Here, meester," cried the small boy peremptorily, "yo' must nae touch that."

"Why not?" asked the duke, amused, seeing that he was not recognized.

"Why, it's th' duke's," answered the boy, "an he'll have you locked up if he knows."

"Oh!" said his grace. "Then will you take charge of it?"

"Aye, that I will," answered the boy promptly. "Me faather's a keeper."

Half an hour afterward the boy and the hare arrived in the kitchen at Chatsworth. The duke had taken a short cut home and had the boy brought to him. The little chap was dumb with terror when he learned what a mistake he had made, but the duke gave him a 5 shilling piece, called him "a good lad" and sent him away rejoicing.

A SONG.

Ah, what is better than this, my dear,
What is better than this?
The thought of a night which has lost its way
Between tomorrow and yesterday;
The full of the tide and the gray of the sea,
And a gull that circleth endlessly;
The breath from a wind which bloweth well;
A sail that hasteth new ports to tell;
If aught is better than this, my dear,
I find it not here, I find it not here.
—Blanche Trask in "The Land of Sunshine."

JUST A CURTAIN FIRE.

It Was In a Girls' Boarding School and Did Complicated Damage.

A fire in a skyscraper may be thrilling, but for dramatic episodes and unexpected complications a fire in a girls' boarding school surpasses it. The boarding school fire is usually what is known among insurance men as a curtain fire, but a curtain fire in a girls' school is more exciting and causes more casualties than an ordinary blaze anywhere else.

One evening last week two girls, who occupy a microscopic hall bedroom in a swell up town school, took the globes off the gas fixtures for hair curling purposes and left them off, because it was easier to do that than to put them on again. Then the girls raised the window a trifle in order to cool the room and dutifully sat down to write home letters. The inevitable happened, and when girl number one poised her pen in the air and glanced around the room in search of inspiration she saw the curtains in a blaze. She screamed. Girl number two looked around and echoed the scream. Then, with promptitude and discretion, both girls fainted. The screams had attracted the attention of the other girls, who rushed to the scene and then did various and sundry stunts, according to their several dispositions. One fainted, several wept, a few ran out of the house, and the rest shouted for the one man on the premises.

When he arrived, things looked rather hopeless. Curtains and woodwork were blazing finely. The floor was littered with prostrate forms, and when three girls have fainted on the floor of a hall bedroom there isn't much space in the room for promenading. The man picked his way across the prostrate forms and ordered all the girls who were not in a dead faint to leave the room, but they didn't go until he lost his temper and spoke with a force which isn't common in boarding school circles. Then they fled; but, unluckily, there was an enemy in the rear. A vigorous and practical woman from Texas had been inspired to go after some water. Returning in mad haste with a large pitcherful of water borne triumphantly aloft, she collided with the retreating forces at the door. The pitcher struck the leader of the retreat squarely in the face and knocked out two of her front teeth, whereupon the injured girl made the fainting trio a quartet and the water carrier dropped her pitcher and went into violent hysterics.

Hysteria, as boarding school teachers know to their sorrow, is contagious, and the one case touched off the crowd. By the time teachers arrived upon the scene the fire was out, but the survivors were in a bad way. It was necessary to put nine-tenths of the school to bed and order wholesale doses of bromide. Even now the girls insist that they haven't recovered from the shock sufficiently to do hard studying, and the victims of the water pitcher are both under the care of trained nurses. As for the man, he gave up his place the next day and confided to the cook that he was going to look for a job in a lunatic asylum, where his boarding school experience would be of value to him.—New York Sun.

English Penny Novels.

Penny novelettes differ from one another in externals rather than in internals. The get up of the better sort is neat and attractive. The type is clear, and the covers might even be called "artistic" in the catholic sense of the term. The inferior kinds are indifferently printed "on gray paper with blunt type," and there are many degrees of excellence between the two extremes. All except one have illustrations ranging from the rudest of woodcuts to the smudgiest of "process" plates. Of course the artist selects the most sensational incidents for his pencil to adorn. The stabbing of the heroine's father by the villain disguised as the hero, the kidnaping of the heroine by Black Tom and his gang of gypsies at the instigation of her jealous rival, the horsewhipping of the villain by the hero in "faultless" evening dress—these and their like naturally present themselves as thoroughly suitable and congenial subjects.—Blackwood's Magazine.

Smoke One With Me.

"Do you smoke?" asked the middle aged man. "You didn't two months ago. You oughtn't to smoke, my boy; you're too young and not strong looking." Then the elderly adviser started to light a cigar. "Have a cigar?" he said absentmindedly, as he scratched a match. The young man took the cigar and bit off the end.

"These are very mild," ended the speaker, presumably for the benefit of his conscience—"very mild, and won't hurt you any."—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Snowball Showers.

More than one explorer in cold climates has noted the curious phenomenon of a "snowball shower." The balls, it is true, are not very big, the average being about the size of a hen's egg, but they are true snowballs for all that, compressed globes of snow, not little lumps of ice or hail.

A fall of the kind occurred in north London in March, 1859, and at the time it was observed that the balls seemed five times as dense and compressed as ordinary snow and in no way to be told from the usual handmade missiles. They had fallen during the night and were strewn many layers thick over a very large area.

No cause—except a doubtful electrical one—can be ascribed for the strange phenomenon, and mountaineers are apt to discredit the stories of snowball showers told them by the old guides till suddenly in the midst of an ordinary storm they find themselves assailed as though by myriads of mischievous schoolboys.—London Standard.

ALABASTINE

WHAT ALABASTINE IS.

Alabastine is the original and only durable wall coating on the market. It is entirely different from all kalsomine preparations. Alabastine is made ready for use in white or twelve beautiful tints by the addition of cold water. It is put up in dry powdered form, in five-pound packages, with full directions on every package. It takes the place of scaling kalsomines, wall paper and paint for walls. Alabastine can be used on plaster, brick, wood or canvas, and a child can brush it on.

WHAT "KALSOMINES" ARE.

Kalsomines are cheap and temporary preparations, manufactured from whiting, chalks, clays, etc. They are stuck on the walls with decaying animal glue. Alabastine is not a kalsomine. It is a rock-base cement, which sets, and it hardens with age. It can be re-coated and re-decorated without having to wash and scrape off its old coats. Beware of a large four-pound package of light kalsomine, sold to dealers for four pounds and offered to customers as a five-pound package.

CHURCHES AND SCHOOLHOUSES.

The interior walls of churches, schoolhouses and all public halls should never be coated with anything but the durable and pure Alabastine. So evident has this fact become, that hundreds of tons are used annually for this work. The genuine Alabastine does not rub or scale off. It is cleanly during the long period of its usefulness. Every owner of a building should use it. Ask your paint dealer or druggist for a card of tints, and write for free copy of our paper, Alabastine Era, to Alabastine Co., Grand Rapids, Mich.

REJECT THE "JUST AS GOOD."

The dealer who tells you that he can sell you the "same thing" as Alabastine or "something just as good," either is not posted or is trying to deceive you. In offering something he has bought cheap and is trying to sell on Alabastine's demands, he may not realize the danger to himself as well as to you. Beware of all new substitutes. Dealers risk a suit for damages by selling and consumers by using an infringement. Alabastine Co. own the right to make and sell wall coatings adapted to mix with cold water.

Manure for Orchards.

So much mischief can be done by applying manures of the wrong kind in orchards, says the Agriculturist, that I doubt if we do not lose more by manuring than by neglecting to manure. Fruit trees do not require at any time barnyard manures, or their equivalent. What they require is a supply of inorganic food. You can do no better for apple trees than to supply them with coal ashes in which there is a liberal admixture of wood ashes. The coal ashes loosen the soil; the wood ashes furnish the fertilizer. If you can get a supply of old mortar you have just the thing you need. A mixture of lime and salt, when so mixed as to leave no free salt, is excellent for all fruit trees. All such manures should be applied as a top-dressing. A peach or plum orchard needs nothing better than swamp muck or earth from the woods, with a slight addition of phosphate and potash.

If barnyard manure is applied at any time, it should be thoroughly decomposed and applied as a top-dressing. Such manure, if placed about the roots, when planting a pear or apple tree, will kill it. Grapes, of course, want phosphates and potash. They will also respond to a free application of liquid manures during their periods of rest, both in winter and in midsummer. All the tall growing berries, of the bramble sort, will use a large amount of organic manure. But be careful about dressing your raspberries with rank undecomposed barnyard manure. The probability is at any time you will develop a fungoid disease that you cannot easily master. If you use barnyard manure in raspberries it should be thoroughly comminuted with the soil as a compost. In fact, I prefer to compost every manure before it is placed on my gardens. Equally important as the manure is the mulching of our fruit trees and bushes of all sorts.

Covering a Wagon Seat.

Procure flannel, either black, blue or green, two dozen buttons for the top of cushion, and the same number for the bottom, black oilcloth for lining the "fall," a spool of stout linen thread, and a long darning needle at least five inches in length. Using the worn "fall" as a pattern, cut the oilcloth of the same size and the flannel three-fourths inch wider all around. Bind the edges of the flannel over the oilcloth, basting firmly with firm silk thread, stitch the two together, the line of stitching being very near the edge of the bound-over flannel.

For the seat cut a narrow strip of oilcloth—buckram is better if you have it—for use as stiffening. Lay narrow tucks in the flannel, both lengthwise and crosswise, stitching them in. This forms squares, and the lines of tucks should be very regular and about four inches apart. Cover the bottom of the seat with oilcloth, cutting it of the desired size. Cut the tucked flannel three-fourths inch larger, and stitch as for the "fall," with the stiffening in place along three edges. Slip this cover over the "hair" or "spring" foundation and fasten the end firmly.

Place a stout twine in your long needle, to it fasten one of the larger buttons, put the needle through the covered cushion at a corner of one square, draw down into the cushion as far as possible, pressing the button with some wooden object from the upper side to force it into the yielding material of the foundation, tie a slip knot in your thread at the lower side, put on the small button, and cutting the thread three inches from the cushion, wind the end between the button last added and the cushion around the eye of the button. The tension will hold it if drawn tight enough through the cushion. At the four corners of each square place buttons.—Orange Judd Farmer.

Growing Spinach.

To grow spinach successfully the work of preparing the ground should begin in autumn after the fall crop of vegetables has been harvested. Work into the soil thoroughly an ample supply of well-rotted manure, then level the ground off smoothly as possible and sow the seed in shallow drills from twelve to sixteen inches apart. Sow the seed scatteringly, for it has been found that thick seeding does not pay. This done, cover it only about half an inch deep, and in conclusion firm the ground by treading down each row with the feet. It is well to get the seed in early in November, for then the plants will have a chance to come up and be thinned out before real winter weather arrives. When the ground is slightly frozen a moderate mulch of litter of leaves may be placed over the plants. In this way an early crop of spinach may be gathered—so early, in fact, that it will be entirely out of the way by the time the ground is ready for other crops.—Farm and Field.

Millet as a Feed for Poultry.

Millet has not been regarded as favorably by poultrymen as it deserves as a food for poultry. It is said to be equal, if not superior, to any other grain as a ration for all kinds of poultry. It is more fattening than wheat and should be carefully fed, and a very good way to avoid danger from it is to feed it unthreshed. This will afford the fowls exercise while they are scratching it out of the straw. No exclusive diet will give as good results as a more diversified one, because hens will relish a change, but there is no reason why millet will not fill the bill as a grain ration fully as well as any other. The seed is very small, and in searching after it they will get some exercise, and picking it up will serve as a means of occupying their time.—Homestead.

Ventilating the Cellar.

A great mistake, says Medical Classics, is sometimes made in ventilating cellars and milk houses. The object of ventilation is to keep the cellars cool and dry, but this object often fails of being accomplished by a common mistake, and instead the cellar is made both warm and damp. A cool place should never be ventilated, unless the air admitted is cooler than the air within, or is at least as cool as that or a very little warmer. The warmer the air the more moisture it holds in suspension. Necessarily the cooler the air the more this moisture is condensed and precipitated. When a cool cellar is aired on a warm day the entering air being in motion appears cool, but as it fills the cellar the cooler air with which it becomes mixed chills it, the moisture is condensed, and dew is deposited on the cold walls, and may often be seen running down them in streams. Then the cellar is damp and soon becomes moldy. To avoid this the windows should only be opened at night, and late—the last thing before retiring. There is no need to fear that the night air is unhealthful; it is as pure as the air of midday, and is really drier. The windows should be closed before sunrise in the morning, and kept closed and shaded through the day. If the air of the cellar is damp it may be thoroughly dried by placing in it a peck of fresh lime in an open box.

Nut-Bearing Trees.

All the nut-growing trees do best when planted where they are to stand permanently, and all must be planted in the fall, as once the nuts become thoroughly dried their vitality is destroyed and they refuse to germinate.

The nuts should be planted only two or three inches deep in order that the frost may get to them and break open the shell.

Among all the nut trees none makes so quick a return as the chestnut when planted where conditions are favorable. The American chestnut is as good and sweet as any from any country, but the size of the nuts do not compare with the Japanese varieties.

The best way to secure Japanese chestnut trees is to plant native chestnuts and afterward graft Japanese scions on them. A similar plan was followed with a chestnut grove in New Jersey. The native trees were cut down and allowed to sprout up, and these sprouts were grafted with scions from Japanese chestnut trees. In ten years each one of these grafts was yielding a crop which brought from $5 to $7 to the tree, and this yield will increase every year for twenty or thirty years, when the yield from one tree will be as much as $30.

Walnuts, hickory nuts or pecans are easily grown, the first two in the North and the last in the South. Walnut trees come into bearing in a few years where they are cultivated, and in course of time produce lumber of the most valuable kind.

To Pollenize Strawberries.

A writer in the Rural New Yorker says that in raising strawberries to assist in securing pollenization, either for fruit for consumption or for the seed, swish an evergreen bush back and forth, just touching the plants lightly, doing this every day while in bloom. The most favorable time is at midday, beneath a clear sky, and when the plants are free from excess of moisture. Avoid drenching the foliage with water when the plants are in bloom, if satisfactory pollenization is desired.

The Sunflower.

The sunflower is a native of North America, but it is more largely cultivated in foreign countries than in the United States. In Russia the seeds are to to some extent parched and eaten in this country. Sunflower seed weighs about thirty pounds to the bushel. The plant has been utilized in malarial districts as a protection against fevers.

Poultry Notes.

Drinking water often spreads disease. Fowls with colds or roup should not be allowed to drink with the others.

Common fowls can be greatly improved in size and vigor by selecting the best, and setting only eggs from the best layers.

Turkeys should not be confined while fattening. If they are fed plenty of corn and soft feed three times a day they will keep quiet enough and put on flesh very fast.

White corn is liked better than yellow by many turkey growers, who think it gives a clear white color to the flesh. Some wheat, barley and buckwheat should be given also.

The various oat feeds on the market are much praised by some poultry feeders. They at least afford a change from the everlasting shorts and cornmeal, of which the hens get very tired.

Fowls like turnips either boiled or raw, and this root should be used freely throughout the winter. The hens will make a better use than any other farm animals of the surplus turnips and potatoes.

Too many people reason that if a dozen hens will give a good profit, another dozen in the same coop will double the profit. One must resolutely keep down the number, so that there will be no crowding.

THE GOSPEL OF GRACE

EXPOUNDED BY OUR RELIGIOUS EDITOR.

Words of Wisdom, and Thoughts Worth Pondering Upon Spiritual and Moral Subjects—Gathered from the Religious and Secular Press.

ANDREW MURray relates that in South Africa there was an infidel blacksmith whom no one could deal with. One day the minister sent the elder of the church, a clever and pious man, to see him. He argued with him, but he could not be convinced; it was of no use. But there was an old farmer who had prayed for years for that infidel.

Early one morning he took his rose and rode to see this man, who greeted him with: "Well, what brings you here at this hour?"

The old farmer stammered badly, and when he was greeted like this he could not get a word out. The infidel laughed. This made it worse.

At last the old man burst into tears, and stammered out: "I am so anxious about your soul," and hurried away. This led to the conversion of the infidel.

See the heavenly treasure in an earthly vessel! The difficulty with some vessels is that they are too high. The lower down the easier to fill. Some vessels may be clean and empty, but not low enough. Therefore, God cannot fill them.

"Oh," exclaims Murray, "let us pray. Lower down, lower down, lower down, Lord; nothing, nothing, nothing, that God alone may be exalted."

Talk of a Testament.

A colporteur was distributing Bibles and testaments to the soldiers who were about to embark for the Crimea. He offered a Testament to a soldier, who asked him what book it might be.

"The Word of God," was the reply.

"Let me have it, then," said the man. But when he had received it he added, laughingly, "Now, it will do very well to light my pipe."

The colporteur felt sorry, but he said to himself, "Well, as I have given it, it must go."

The following year that same colporteur found himself in the center of France. He sought lodgings at an inn, the people who kept it being in great distress at the death of their son. The mother explained that her son had gone to the Crimea, and returned to die of his wounds. "But I have such consolation," she said; "he was so peaceful and happy, and he brought comfort to me and his father."

"How was this?" asked the colporteur.

"Oh," she said, "he found all his comfort in one little book which he had always with him."

The colporteur begged to see the book, and they brought him a copy of the New Testament, or which the first fifteen or twenty pages had been torn out. But on the inside of the cover was written: "Received at Toulon (with the date); despised—neglected—read—believed—and found salvation." The place and date were recognized by the colporteur, and thus he reaped the seed he had sown.—Ram's Horn.

"Oh, to Be Nothing."

"Oh, to be nothing, nothing!" cries the mystic singer in his revival hymn, desiring to lose himself in God. Nay, not that: "Oh, to be something, something!" remonstrates the unmystical man, longing for work, ardent for personal life and character. Where is the meeting of the two? How shall self-surrender meet that high self-value, without which no man can justify his living and honor himself in his humility? Where can they meet but in this truth? Man must be something that he may be nothing. The something which he must be consists in simple fitness to utter the divine life, which is the only original power in the universe. And, then, man must be nothing that he may be something. He must submit himself in obedience to God, that so God may see him in some way in which his special nature only could be used to illuminate and help the world. Tell me, do not the two cries meet in that one aspiration of the Christian man to find his life by losing it in God, to be himself by being not his own, but Christ's?—Phillips Brooks.

A Gleam of Sunshine.

So long as a clouded life is touched now and again by some clear gleam of sunshine, that may suffice; for it proves that the sun is still shining in the heavens. Once out of the cloud comes the gladness of the perfect day.—Richard Rothe.

The World Over.

The Westminster Presbyterian Church of Minneapolis, the great church of the northwest, has about 600 members.

Fifty-five thousand dollars has been given by John M. Studebaker, Thomas Kane and Alexander McDonald to raise the mortage on the Presbyterian summer school at Winona Lake, Ind.

There are more than 400 Christian Endeavor societies in India, where a year ago there were only half that number.

Ten thousand dollars for missionary work in Porto Rico and Eastern Cuba have been asked for by the Baptist missionary board.

The Turkish government has granted the Palestine exploration fund directors permission to work at Gath, the home of Goliath, the giant.

The ninth international Sunday school convention, representing the United States, Canada and Mexico, will be held at Atlanta, Ga., April 27-30.

The Chicago Training School has sent more than 100 missionaries to foreign fields and has prepared over 300 deaconesses for work in the Methodist Episcopal church.

At the recent two hundredth anniversary of the First Baptist Church of Philadelphia there was exhibited the original deed, dated 1694, conveying the land on which the first church was built.

Missionaries and other Christian workers in India are contemplating a reproduction in that country of the well known Northfield conference in this country. A beginning will be made in Mussoorie next September.

General Olmstead of New York City, an officer during the civil war, commanding the First brigade in Hancock's division at the battle of Gettysburg, a convert in the Catholic Church, was recently ordained to the priesthood at Notre Dame.

It is stated that the tract entitled "Come to Jesus" by Dr. Newman Hall has had the largest circulation any tract has ever attained. It has been translated into forty languages, and though never advertised, over 4,000,000 copies have been sold.

Henry H. Faxon recently gave $100 to each of the twenty-three Protestant churches in Quincy, Mass. At Christmas time, in addition to this, he gave the Sunday schools connected with these churches sums varying from $15 to $75, on the principle of 25 cents for each member, to be spent in Christmas festivities.

Rev. Dr. J. H. McIlvaine, formerly co-pastor with Rev. Dr. Henry Van Dyck of the Brick Presbyterian Church in New York, was recently advanced to the Episcopal ministry by Bishop Potter. Dr. McIlvaine makes the third prominent Presbyterian minister to take orders recently in what Dr. Edward Abbott said was the "roomiest church in America."

NAMES FOR NAVAL VESSELS.

Uncle Sam's Ships Decorated Chiefly with Geographical Terms.

The nomenclature of the vessels of the United States navy is deficient in names made famous by acts of naval heroism, but abounds in geographical terms, which make a list of Uncle Sam's ships resemble an extract from a postal guide. There's a class of vessels in the English navy known as the "admiral" class, where the names of Nelson, Anson, Rodney, Benbow, and other naval leaders may be found, and this same method of perpetuating the names of admirals exists in Russia. The custom of preserving the names of victories at sea is also observed in many countries by naming vessels after the place near which the fight occurred. But in the United States navy these customs cannot be carried out, and although the name of Farragut is honored and revered by the navy no large ship of any class bears the name of the hero of Mobile bay.

In the torpedo-boat class there are exceptions to this rule, and the fleet contains an Ericsson, a Cushing, a Porter, a Foote, a Dahlgren, a Dupont, a Goldsborough, and others.

The single-turreted monitors bear Indian names, such as Comanche, Catskill, Canonicus, Mahopac, Montauk, Wyandotte, but not to the exclusion of other names, for the list includes the names of Ajax and Manhattan. In the old wooden navy the names of Franklin, Adams, and Marion are still preserved, along with Yantic, Alert, and Nipsic. The Indian name is also represented in this class by several vessels, among which are the Mohican, the Monocacy, and the Omaha.

The double-turreted monitors have names which are to be found nowhere in ship nomenclature except in the United States navy. Among them are the Amphitrite, the Miantonomah, and the Monadnock. The Vicksburg and the Annapolis are composite gunboats, and are named after places where important military operations took place. No set rule seems to obtain for the naming of gunboats. The list includes the Petrel, the Machias, the Nashville, the Helena, the Concord, the Bancroft, and the Bennington. The armored cruisers, like the New York and the Brooklyn, are named after cities, as are the protected cruisers, such as the Atlanta, the Baltimore, the Charleston, the Chicago, the Cincinnati, the Columbia, the Newark, the Raleigh, and the San Francisco, although the Olympia is also of that class. The armored battleships, of which the Maine was a good specimen, are all named after States, except the Kearsarge, which, by special act of Congress, was named to perpetuate the old ship which had won distinction in the famous fight with the Alabama before the days of the steel battleship.

The old wooden navy is made up of the venerable invalids, all put away in comfortable quarters. The Constitution is the retaining ship at Newport; the Vermont is used as a receiving-ship in the Brooklyn navy yard; the Dale is used by the Maryland naval reserve; the Independence is the receiving-ship at Mare Island, and the Jamestown is a quarantine ship. The Monongahela is attached to the training squadron, the New Hampshire is the headquarters of the New York naval reserve, and the Saratoga is a nautical school ship.

Straw Horse Shoes In Japan.

The Japanese shoe their horses with straw. Even the clumsiest of cart horses wear straw shoes, which in their cases are tied around the ankle with straw rope and are made of the ordinary rice straw, braided so as to form a sole for the foot about half an inch thick.

EARNING ONE'S OWN LIVING.

MOST of the educated women now obliged to earn their own living can look back upon a girlhood of freedom and pleasure, from which they were suddenly hurried, by stress of circumstances, into the field of labor, where the workers are always many and the prizes few, says the Philadelphia Times. Desperate often with the monotony of daily work, many young women take hasty refuge in that before-mentioned employment of wife, lacking the most needful qualification—Love. The majority suffer their heartbreak with a deathly stillness, simulating an interest in the work that they are far from feeling.

Against feminine employment of a kind there can be no prejudice, for there is much that women, and women only, can do successfully; but it is the incessant employment all day, and from week end to week end that tells so severely upon woman's health and brightness, oftitmes upon her womanliness, leaving her nothing but the nervous, ever-present dread of loss of employment and the certainty of an old age of poverty and loneliness? For not the least unhappy factor in this daily employment of women is that they have no time to make and cement the friendships that might comfort and support them in their old age.

Seeing how contracted still is the field of feminine labor and how many are urgently needing employment therein, one cannot speak too strongly in disapproval of women who engage in the competition for vacant positions prepared to take a smaller remuneration than the market value of the work they can do because distraction, and not money, is their object, and they know full well they can throw the employment aside as soon as it fatigues them and return with zest to the pleasures and comforts of home. These dainty dilettantes in the world of work are, in plain words, robbing their poorer sisters in a most culpable and unwomanly manner. For the competition, being already so great, no honorable woman should accept a position for which remuneration is given unless she is absolutely obliged to work to support herself or some members of her family.

Decorative Bit of Furniture.

The possibilities of window decoration in the hands of an ingenious woman are simply endless, and the housekeeper who is so fortunate as to have a wide recessed window, may make a most artistic as well as useful nook of it. The services of a carpenter are, of course, necessary, but after he has fitted the boards in place, milady's own fair fingers may complete the decorations.

Have four boards, one inch thick, fitted into the recess and nailed securely in place. The top board must be on a level with the window sill, or, better still, cover it; the fourth board is screwed to the floor, and the other two placed equal distances apart. If desired, two commodious drawers may fill part of the two lower compartments, but this increases expense materially, without adding much to the beauty of the pretty book shelves. Screw a brass rod to the second shelf and fasten to it with rings some curtains in china silk or chintz, using the space so covered for old magazines, pamphlets, etc., while that above may be used for books, and the top shelf for bowls of flowers, ferneries or growing plants.

The curtains across the casement should match those of the bookshelves, and the woodwork of the whole should be the same, either ivory white or stained oak, stained to match the other fittings of the room. Odd bits of china or silver look well on the lower shelves.

Care of the Hair.

Cut a third of an inch off your hair when the moon is new, and do the same the next month when the moon is full. Every night give it a good brushing, being careful not to scratch the scalp. Use the brush while dressing the hair when possible in place of the comb. Wash hair every six weeks, using warm water and any mild toilet soap; rinse first with warm water with a little borax, and then use clear, cold water. Dry thoroughly. If the hair falls out and is very dry, rub a little oil on the scalp.

When to Punish Children.

Don't punish your little ones before others. It stirs up all the temper there is in their little bodies. Not only that, but if they are old enough to realize much, it lessens their respect for you, and their own self-respect receives a bad blow. I say wait until you are all alone with the child, and if after a kind and loving talk you feel that it must be punished, do it. I have seen children so ashamed at being reproved or punished before people that it has made my heart ache for them. Perhaps this would be what some would like, and think it better for them to be so ashamed. I do not. Besides, if a child does wrong things before our guest, or their own companions, it hurts us very much, but if we punish a child before them will the latter not be very much disturbed? And it will hurt them by making them feel uncomfortable and out of place. So it makes it bad all around.—Orange Judd Farmer.

varied are the forms these arrangements have taken, the most usual being a row of tiny buttons on both sides, laced or looped across. Our illustration shows the general effect of these various devices, and a new idea that recommends itself, because, while being very ornamental, it is utilitarian as well, it can be easily adjusted to any skirt. They come in sets of a half-dozen pairs and are easily sewed on.

Marriageable Daughters.

Fathers and mothers need not be husband hunters, but they should be genial, hospitable hosts to such young women and men as they deem fit companions for their daughters. It is their duty to enter heartily and cheerfully into the lives of their girls at this stage of their career as well as any other. Many a young woman has been deprived of social life because of the indifference or open inhospitality of her parents to her friends. The father who selfishly seeks his own comfort and enjoyment, burying himself in a book or paper when his daughter's friends are in his parlor, creating an atmosphere of restraint and unsociability, is, perhaps, dooming his girls to a lonely, unhappy life. The mother who is scant of courtesy and friendliness to these guests is doing her daughters a greater and more lasting wrong than neglect of some of their personal wants in their earlier years would have entailed.

Nor does their duty end in a willingness to receive and entertain in a cordial way the young people congenial to their girls; if it be that there are not young men and women in their neighborhood with whom their daughters can associate, it is their bounden duty to remove thence to a community furnishing the necessary elements for an adequate social life. Families move for much less important reasons; they seldom move for more important ones.

Scented Stationery.

A woman's stationery should speak of herself, and should be as much identified with her personality as possible. A sachet of violet powder, or orris, placed in your letter box, gives a subtle odor to the paper, which some women love to affect, but it is far better and safer to avoid all perfumes in your stationery, as sometimes one is tempted to go too far. Men have been seen to throw down a note or letter in disgust when detecting the slightest perfume about it. Under no consideration should a man ever use perfume in his stationery. Scents of all kinds should be shunned by men, either in their paper or about their persons.—San Francisco Chronicle.

About Introductions.

Superfluous introductions were once—and not so long ago, either—an almost universal nuisance in this country. The woman who persists in the farce of "making people acquainted" in the twinkling of an eye, under any and all circumstances, is still to be found, but she is happily becoming more and more rare. The confirmed introducer is a bore, and should be ruthlessly discouraged; but, until mental telepathy shall have become a more widespread accomplishment than it is now, the old-fashioned introduction ought not to be permitted to lapse into utter disuse.

Domestic to Get a Fortune.

Susannah Humble, a St. Louis domestic, will receive a fortune of $240,000, left by her grandfather in Scotland. The search for the missing heiress has extended over twelve months. The fortune was left to Susannah and her sister, Mary, who came from Scotland six years ago, with their parents, and settled in Quincy, Ill., Susannah going to St. Louis four years ago. She says the first thing she will do with her money will be to buy a nice home for her parents.

SUSANNAH HUMBLE.

OUR OLDEST CITY.

The Honor Now Said to Belong to Caparra, in Porto Rico.

The settlement of Ponce de Leon at Caparra, near the site of Pueblo Viejo, across San Juan Bay, is now, by more than fifty-five years, the first town established within the present borders of the United States. Historians, therefore, must give the prestige of antiquity not to the Spanish town of St. Augustine, Fla., of 1565, as formerly, but to Caparra, founded in the year 1509.

Dr. M. W. Harrington, of the San Juan weather office, discovered the exact location of the historical Caparra unexpectedly. On a pleasure walk into the country he happened to select the road to Pueblo Viejo, and when talking with the native residents learned their traditions of the first Spanish town in Porto Rico. He accordingly procured a guide and made an examination of the nearly extinct ruins. Of his interesting discovery Dr. Harrington says:

"Without doubt, the ruins I found are those of the first settlement established by the explorer and colonizer, Ponce de Leon. Both local tradition and history name Caparra as the earliest town on the island, and agree, moreover, on the same site near Old Village, or Pueblo Viejo. Even the native negroes, some of whom could neither read nor write, knew the story of Caparra. My personal investigation further satisfied me of the correctness of their tradition."

The only remains of the original town visible now are the ruins of a church, hospital, and a repaired limestone furnace. Most of the stone from the church, hospital and houses has been used, according to the natives, in the construction of new highways. On a little elevation from the shore swamps, the site of Caparra is hidden from San Juan Bay, three miles distant, by a row of hills. Another historical landmark near by is the reputed gold mine worked by the first Spanish settlers. Ponce de Leon greatly enriched himself, say tradition and also history, by the compulsory labor of the native Indians in the mines. Although attacked by hordes of mosquitoes, the gray-haired old warrior and explorer remained in Caparra until 1512, and then set sail for the miraculous fountain of youth. His voyage ended on Easter Sunday, March 27, 1512, in the discovery of the present peninsula of Florida. But the greater part of the original colony stayed in Caparra until compelled a few years later to abandon the town in order to escape the hot fever weather and an army of mosquitoes. The final evacuation is said to have been in 1552.

The story of the foundation of Caparra is told at length in "The History of Porto Rico," published in 1866 by Fray Inigo Abbad y Lasierra and revised by Jose Julian de Acosta y Culbo. Under the title of the "First Colonizer," the authors say: "When Ponce de Leon was in possession of the government of the island he decided to establish a town separate from the Indians. He chose a place near the mines they were working and started to build a town, which he called Caparra. It was situated on the north coast, opposite the sea of St. John, near Pueblo Viejo. The ruins are seen in the vicinity of the plantation of Don Manuel Diaz, near the brook named Margarita, a place surrounded by swamps. So difficult was the work of bringing supplies there from the ships in the bay, a distance of only a league, that the cost was more than that for getting them from Spain to Porto Rico. But the opportunity this place gave the Spaniards to satisfy their desire for gold made light for them the hardships which they endured in this town for ten years. * * * The historians Herrera and Oviedo disagree about the year of the establishment of Caparra, the former saying in 1510 and the latter in 1509."—Porto Rico correspondence New York Sun.

Encouraging to Mothers.

Mothers of the small children possessed to put everything in their mouths will be glad to know that matches at last are to be taken out of the category of things poisonous. To effect death now, says the match manufacturers, a person would have to eat the ends of some 6,000 matches. This even an industrious child would hardly be apt to do. The substitution of a mixture of phosphorus sequi, sulphide and chloride of potash for the poisonous yellow phosphorus has been brought about through the efforts of the French government, which appointed a commission for the purpose of finding something that would ignite readily, but be less dangerous to manufacture.

A Goose Market.

It is not generally known that in Prague there exists a goose "bourse," where yearly some 3,000,000 geese change hands. Its most active time lasts generally from about six to eight weeks, from the middle of September to the first days of November. As the geese are driven in from long distances, they are "shod," that is to say, walked repeatedly over patches of tar mixed with fine sand. This forms a hard crust on the feet of the geese, and they, thus "shod," are able to cover immense distances without fatigue.

The white man's burden is an infinitesimal affair compared with that the Filipinos are carrying these days. A contemporary refers to the slaughter now going on on across the Pacific as the Filipinos rabbit drive, and the term about as aptly describes the situation as any that has been devised. The newswaper reports of glorious victories, announced in startling headlines arouses no enthusiasm among the American people. Our continued and bloody effort to impress on those islanders the sincerity of our friendly intention, meets with little approval from the public. When Cuba was struggling against the Spaniards for that freedom that comes with self government, the hearts of Americans went out to them in sympathy and we were ready to begin war with a friendly power to aid them. Now we are in Spain's position and to-day we are attempting to coerce the Filipinos to accept, they know not what.

An article in the last Strand Magazine, concerning the history of Punch, the great humorous weekly of England, shows that the United States is not alone in inefficiency in treating her soldiers in perilous times. It appears that Great Britain's War Office, during the Crimean War, was most horribly mismanaged, and that the soldiers were left to endure the Russian Winter without proper clothing and proper food, a scandal which at the time Punch handled severely more than once. Leech, the great Punch cartoonist, in 1855 published a cartoon in Punch depicting two half-clad and shivering English soldiers talking to each other in the snow outside the tents of the British Army. The following is the conversation as given by Punch:

"Well Jack, here's good news from home; we're to have a medal."

"You're very kind. Maybe one of these days we'll have a coat to stick it on."

The death of Judge Field in his 83rd year, after the longest judicial career of any justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, commits a life of great labor and of marked eminence to the calm arbitrament of history. He came from revolutionary stock. His father was a distinguished clergyman. He was one of five brothers, all of whom were especially gifted and noted. In 1837 he graduated with first honors from Williams college. For four years he applied himself to preparatory law studies and in 1841 was admitted to the bar of New York. For eight years he was in partnership with his elder brother, David Dudley Field, who was numbered among the great lawyers of the Union. In 1849 after a second visit to Europe, he came to California. In 1850 at Marysville the record of Judge Field's activities fairly begins. His possession of unusual mental power, especially adapted to the profession he selected, and his thorough comprehension of principles and understanding of technicalities have never been questioned. Possessed of these advantages, at the age of 33 he took his place among the pioneers of this State, who, in proportion to their numbers, combined intelligence, education and energy in a degree never paralleled in the history of new communities. The adoption of American institutions and American law to the conditions established by the Mexican rule, and especially relating to land tenures, also produced litigation of original impression and of vast importance, which demanded and obtained for its solution legal capacity of the highest order. After years of lucrative practice, in which his success in appealed cases raised him above most of his contemporaries, in 1857 he was elected to the Supreme Bench, where he served for about six years, and with his able coadjutors, first as an Associate Justice and afterward as Chief Justice, contributed to the elevation of our highest tribunal to a dignity which commanded respect not only throughout the Union, but abroad. Politically he was a Democrat, and when the Civil War broke out he threw his intellect and his influence on the side of the Union. In 1863 he was appointed by President Lincoln one of the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States and was assigned to the Tenth Circuit. Transferred from the Supreme Court of the State to the Supreme Court of the nation, a tribunal that in the extent of its jurisdiction and in the novelty and intricacy of the questions it is called upon to determine, has no equal on the globe, the opportunities of Judge Field for the display of his judicial strength were enhanced by the complicated litigation that followed the close of the Civil War. He proved equal to every occasion and though frequently in the minority, he left an indelible impression upon the jurisprudence of his country. In 1880 he received 85 votes for Presidential nominee in the Democratic National Convention. On December 1st, 1897, Justice Field retired from the Supreme Bench. The President in his letter of acceptance of the resignation said: "Upon your retirement both the bench and court and country will sustain a great loss, but the high character and ability of your work will live and long be remembered, not only by your colleagues, but by your grateful fellow-countrymen." In Judge Field's death a great intellect and a wealth of erudition have been extinguished.

A QUESTION OF MANURES.

Phosphates, Rather Than Nitrogen, Our Dominant Wheat Fertilizer.

A critic of Sir William Crookes' recent address, writing to The Country Gentleman, raises an interesting point and one which seems not to have received much if any attention from others who have differed from Sir William's views. This writer quotes what he pronounces to be, for American wheat growers, probably the most misleading statement of the address and comments upon it as follows:

"It is now recognized that all plants require what is called a dominant manure. Some need nitrogen, some potash, others phosphoric acid. Wheat preeminently demands nitrogen fixed in the form of ammonia or nitric acid." This is exactly the opposite of American experience, and I doubt if a director of a single experiment station in the United States would confirm the statement that wheat pre-eminently demands nitrogen. The action of nitrogen is primarily that of a stimulant to vegetative growth, and its effect is at once visible in the dark green foliage and rank growth which is made at the expense of the grain. It is a characteristic of wheat grown on land very rich in nitrogen to make a rank growth and then "lodge" before ripe, and the heads are poorly filled, and yet Sir William Crookes tells us that the average yield of the world can be brought up to 30 bushels per acre through the increased use of nitrates. At the Cornell experiment station wheat grown on plants that had been fertilized with nitrogen to the extent recommended by Lawes and Gilbert did not even head out, and the crop was a total failure.

The difference in the effect of nitrates on English and American soils is thought to be largely due to climate. The English climate is moist and damp with much cloudy weather and nitrification is delayed. In our country the bright sunshiny weather and fairly dry condition seem to hasten nitrification. It has been demonstrated time and again that an excess of nitrogen in the land for wheat is soon reached, and for us the phosphates seem to be much nearer a dominant manure for the wheat crop. This is plainly shown by the numerous "wheat special" brands of fertilizers that are found upon the market whose chief value is in the phosphoric acid they contain.

Sir William further says that "all other necessary constituents exist in the soil, but nitrogen is mainly of atmospheric origin." Professor Roberts in his book, "The Fertility of the Land," gives the average analyses of 49 soils from different portions of the United States, and calculates the amount of nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash in the first eight inches of surface soil: Nitrogen, 3,053 pounds; phosphoric acid, 4,219 pounds; potash, 16,317 pounds.

This does not show the nitrogen to be very much below the phosphoric acid. Besides this, nitrogen often seems more available for plants than the phosphoric acid or potash and an addition of these elements will often give greater yields than an addition of nitrogen. For American soils at least it is fully as important to add phosphoric acid as nitrogen for the wheat crops.

A Gateway In Wire Fencing.

Sometimes it is necessary to drive through a wire fence at certain places. The plan of an Iowa Homestead writer for providing a temporary gate is to drive staples into the post where the wire is, one above and one below the wire, close enough together so the wire will pass through between them and at a right angle from the manner they are driven when across the wire.

TEMPORARY FASTENING FOR WIRES.

Pass the wire between the two staples and pass a nail through the staples over the wire, as will be seen by the illustration. When it is necessary to pass through, all that will be necessary to do will be to remove the nails and lay the wires down. They are easily replaced also, when through with them.

The Drill For Spring Grain.

A drill cannot be run among cornstalks for putting in spring grain. A drill is so constructed that it will not do the best work unless the ground is free from trash of all kinds, says the Iowa Homestead. We have tried the drill for putting in oats in the spring of the year, but it was when the crop was universally good, and we could not note the advantage. The ground has to be plowed, harrowed and put in good tilth before drilling. There are seeders with a spring tooth attachment that will put in oats fairly well only. As a rule, oats should be in the ground before it is sufficiently dry to make preparations for the drill, and any implement like the disk that will thoroughly stir the surface soil will be good for putting in the oats crop. There may be one advantage in employing the drill in putting in oats. It is where clover is to be sown in the field. Then the ground should be well plowed, reduced and the oats drilled in and the clover seed at the same operation. Drill 2½ bushels of oats per acre. This gives the very best kind of seed bed for clover seed.

Fertilizer For Fruit.

Farmers often ask how much fertilizer they ought to use on fruit. The question is hard to answer, but The Rural New Yorker says it must be remembered in using potash and phosphoric acid alone that neither of these substances is likely to be lost in large quantities. If one has the capital to spare, these minerals are nearly as safe in the soil as out of it. With nitrogen the case is different, as a portion of this is liable to be lost, and therefore large applications of nitrogen at any single time are not advised.

Red Hair the Best Wear.

Why are redheaded people less subject to baldness than those with fair or brown hair? An English physician has answered this conundrum.

The hair of the redheaded is relatively thick, one red hair being as thick as five blond or three brown hairs. With 30,000 red hairs the scalp is well thatched. With the same number of blond hairs one is almost bald. It takes 160,000 blond and 105,000 brown hairs to cover adequately an ordinary head.

FARM AND GARDEN

BEE LORE.

Points Worth Noting About Winter and Spring Care.

Mr. C. P. Dadant, the well known authority in beedom, has been giving a series of interesting articles in American Bee Journal from one of which, in regard to the care of bees for wintering, the following is selected:

A number of apiarists say that they pay no attention to the spot occupied by the bees when removed, and that when they take them out in the spring it does not matter much where they are placed, whether on the exact spot they occupied before winter or in the place of one another. Once or twice we had considerable trouble from changing the location of hives, and have positively ascertained that many of the bees remember their former location, after three months of wintering, so we take particular pains to mark each hive's stand. To do this without trouble, we leave the cap or cover with the roof over it in the exact spot occupied by the hive and remove only the brood chamber to the cellar. In this manner the hives occupy a much smaller space, and it is easier to give them good ventilation, which is absolutely necessary to keep the combs from molding, if the cellar is at all damp.

We pile the hives in the cellar, two or three or even four tiers high, usually putting the lower tier on timbers raised a foot or so from the ground. We have always noticed that the colonies nearest the ground were the ones that suffered, if any did.

After the hives are in, darkness, quietness, a proper temperature and a sufficient amount of ventilation are all that are necessary. For these hives, as well as for those that are out in cold days, it is a great point to have everything perfectly quiet. The man who will disturb his bees every other day, just to see whether they are still alive, will be unsuccessful, if the circumstances are at all unfavorable, for it is very easy to kill the bees with too much kindness of this sort.

To give air without light to our bee cellar we have devised a sort of blind, a picture of which is here shown, taken from "Langstroth Revised."

The time of removal of the bees in the spring is of utmost importance to consider. If they are taken out too early, they may not have occasion to fly much, and their power of endurance during a late cold seems to have been taken away from them by their prolonged stay in the cellar. They are very much like a horse that is kept in a warm barn. He is more apt to be fretful of the cold and to suffer than one that stays all winter in a cold stable. Yet our sympathies are all in the direction of the softer treatment. With the bees there was on our part, as in the fall, a tendency to be too much afraid of a long confinement. I believe it was Dr. Miller who said the best time to remove the bees from the cellar was in March or April, at the opening of the first buds of soft maple bloom. This is a very good criterion.

But, above all things, a warm day must be selected to remove the bees from their confinement. If you take them out on a cold day, their anxious desire to take a flight will induce them to venture when the temperature is too low for their safety, and many of them will perish. If the day is warm and pleasant, they will take a cleansing flight within a very few minutes after they have been brought out, and are thereafter ready for their habitual duties.

I have often been asked whether it is advisable to take the bees out on a warm day during the winter for a good flight and put them back again. I have never tried this, but from all that I ever heard I do not believe such a course is successful. The bees after their flight begin to rear some brood and remain less quiet than if they had been kept indoors all winter.

American Versus English Statistics.

In reply to Sir William Crookes' statement that practically no uncultivated prairie land remains in the United States suitable for wheat culture, Edward Atkinson has been thus quoted: "In fact, there are now fully 100,000 square miles of land in the United States, fully suited to the production of wheat at 15 bushels to the acre, practically unoccupied in any branch of agriculture, which would be devoted to wheat on an assured price of $1 per bushel in Mark lane (London) yielding 900,000,000 bushels."

"Ladies and gentlemen," said an Irish manager to an audience of three, "as there is nobody here, I'll dismiss you all. The performance of this night will not be performed, but will be repeated tomorrow evening."

Eggs from Australia are landed in London in such perfect preservation that they are sold as new laid.

"Many a man," once said Phillips Brooks, "can say, 'I did the things my father told me, but the man I am my mother made me.'"

SHERIFF SALE.

BY VIRTUE OF AN EXECUTION, ISSUED out of the Justice's Court of Fifth Township, County of Inyo, State of California, and to me directed and delivered, for a judgment rendered and entered in said Court, on the 9th day of August, 1897, in favor of J. B. Dover and against L. B. Harrison, I have levied on the following property, to wit: An undivided one-half interest in that certain water right known as the "Wingfield and Harrison" water claim, commencing at a monument of stone on the north side line of Jim Cooper's mill site location and running along said line east forty rods thence north 20 rods, thence west 40 rods, thence south 20 rods to place of beginning. Is at Stone Corral in South Park Mining District, Inyo County, state of California. Also,

An undivided one half interest in that certain mine or mining claim known as the "Myrtle Lee." This claim is located about three miles southeast of South Park Spring, in the panamint range of mountains, on the west side o. said range, in South Park Mining District, Inyo County, California.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that on the 4th day of February, 1899, at one o'clock p. m. of that day, in front of the Justice's office, in the town of Ballarat, County of Inyo, I will sell all the right title and interest of said L. B Harrison in and to the above described property, at PUBLIC AUCTION, for cash, gold coin in hand to the highest and best bidder, to satisfy said execution and all costs.

An Inyo Girl From Manila.

The Newport arrived at San Francisco last Monday from Manila, and among the passengers were six officers' wives. Mrs. Lucie, wife of Lieutenant John Lucie of the Third Artillery was among the number. The officers wives left here on the Newport and on their arrival at Manila took up their lodgings at Cavite. When the fighting began all the women were put back on the Newport, as an attack by the rebels was feared. They witnessed the fighting from the decks of the transport and had a thrilling time of it.

"Yes, I have had lots of experience and plenty of excitement," said Mrs. Lucie. "We were all so nicely lodged at Cavite, and were really enjoying life in the tropics, when serious trouble commenced. My husband was ordered to the front, and when I left Cavite he was miles in the country on duty with his command. The natives are very treacherous, and after Manila was fired we could not put trust in any of them. There was some talk of Cavite being attacked, and as the place is a number of miles from Manila it would have to be defended by men from the fleet and the soldiers left on guard. We broke up our quarters and were bundled on board the Newport. I was sick on the voyage up but am feeling well now."

Mrs. Lucie is the daughter of Judge Alvah Conklin. Her relatives did not know of her return so none of them were down to meet her when she came ashore. She took a carriage and drove uptown prepared to surprise her mother and sister. She was married to Lieutenant Lucy just before he was ordered to Manila and her honeymoon was spent aboard the Newport.—S. F. Call.

Harry Richardson came in from Coso last Monday with a bar of gold valued at $1,500, the result of a cleanup of the cyanide plant. He purchased a large amount of supplies which have been sent out with an eight animal team. The company represented by Mr. Richardson is not making much noise, but it is taking out good pay just the same and shows what can be done at an old abandoned mining camp.

George Naylor and H. D. Gill have been appointed Rangers to patrol the Sierra Forest Reserve in this vicinity and keep out stock.

Ordinance No. 67

Providing for the Appointment of a County Stock Inspector defining his duties and powers and fixing his compensation.

The Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo, State of California, do ordain as follows:

SECTION 1. The Board of Supervisors shall appoint a competent Veterinary Surgeon to act as Inspector of Live Stock for said County, to be known as County Stock Inspector, and to hold said office during the pleasure of said Board.

SECTION 2. It shall be the duty of such County Stock Inspector, upon the written request of any member of said Board of Supervisors, to examine any live stock in said county suspected of being affected with any contagious or infectious disease, and if he shall find such live stock, or any portion of it, to be affected with any contagious or infectious disease he shall at once notify the owner or the person in charge of such diseased livestock and the State Veterinarian of the State of California of such fact and while awaiting the action or instructions of the said State Veterinarian, he may, and he is hereby empowered, to take such steps as he shall deem necessary to prevent the spread of such contagious or infectious disease.

SECTION 3. The said County Stock Inspector shall be allowed and paid for his services as such Stock Inspector the sum of five dollars for each day actually and necessarily engaged in the discharge of his duties, and fifteen cents a mile actually traveled, in going only, when required, as hereinbefore specified, to go ten miles or more from his place of residence.

SECTION 4. This ordinance shall take effect and be in force fifteen days from and after its passage and shall be published with the names of the members of the Board of Supervisors voting for and against the same, in the Inyo Independent a newspaper published in the said County of Inyo, at least one week. Said publication to be made for said time and before the expiration of said fifteen days.

A. C. FREEMAN,
{SEAL} Chairman of the Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo State of California.

Attest: D. J. HESSION,
Clerk of said Board of Supervisors.

The above and foregoing ordinance No 67 was duly passed, enacted and ordained by the Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo, State of California, at a regular meeting of said Board, on the 6th day of April, 1899.

WILD RUSH OF DIAMOND MINERS.

A wild rush of excited miners is reported at Nullagine, Western Australia, where diamonds have been discovered in large quantities, and it is feared that many will lose their lives in the mad struggle for riches. In this country the rush for gain is causing many other men to break down in health and strength. Nervousness, sleeplessness, loss of flesh and appetite and general debility are the common symptoms. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters will cure them all.

Ingrowing Nails.

To prevent an ingrowing nail a strip of cotton should be worked between the nail and the flesh, left large enough to cover the entire nail. A piece of cotton is then twisted into a long roll and placed on the other side of the nail groove over the sound skin. The space between is filled with lead nitrate, heaped up, and the larger piece of cotton folded over it, with more cotton outside, held in place with a moist bandage. This dressing is renewed every day, and in two or three the exuberance is reduced until the edge of the nail can be seen, and cotton inserted between it and the flesh beneath, when the nitrate can be discontinued.

Mormonism.

The good wife looked at her mending basket and sighed. If she hadn't seen them there she wouldn't have believed her husband could have worn holes in so many pairs of socks in so short a time.

"There are occasions," she said at last, "when I am almost ready to believe that it would be a good thing for a man to be a Mormon."

Then she went at the job she would willingly have shared with a few other wives.—Chicago Post.

"Durability is Better Than Show."

The wealth of the multi-millionaires is not equal to good health. Riches without health are a curse, and yet the rich, the middle classes and the poor alike have, in Hood's Sarsaparilla, a valuable assistant in getting and maintaining perfect health. It never disappoints.

Scrofula—"Three years ago our son, now eleven, had a serious case of scrofula and erysipelas with dreadful sores, discharging and itching constantly. He could not walk. Several physicians did not help for sixteen months. Three months' treatment with Hood's Sarsaparilla made him perfectly well. We are glad to tell others of it." MRS. DAVID LAIRD, Ottawa, Kansas.

Nausea—"Vomiting spells, dizziness and prostration troubled me for years. Had neuralgia, grew weak and could not sleep. My age was against me, but Hood's Sarsaparilla cured me thoroughly. My weight increased from 125 to 143 pounds. I am the mother of nine children. Never felt so well and strong since I was married as I do now." MRS. M. A. WATERS, 1329 33d St., Washington, D. C.

Eczema—"We had to tie the hands of our two-year-old son on account of eczema on face and limbs. No medicine even helped until we used Hood's Sarsaparilla, which soon cured." MRS. A. VAN WYCK, 123 Montgomery Street, Paterson, N. J.

WEAPONS OF ASSASSINS.

They Used to Be Filed Away or Were Ground to Pieces.

The Emperor of Austria, in taking steps to secure the destruction in Geneva, in the presence of the Austro-Hungarian envoy and his consular officials, of the weapon with which the empress was assassinated, as well as the surgical instruments used by the Swiss physicians in making the post-mortem examination, acted in accordance with royal and old world usage and tradition in the matter, says an exchange.

It is a custom which is based partly on superstition and partly on a determination to prevent articles of this kind from falling into the hands of dealers in curiosities and being placed on exhibition in some more or less reputable museum or traveling show. The emperor has also sent to Vienna, for preservation in the imperial palace, the bed on which the body of the murdered empress lay until placed in the coffin.

Until fifty years ago the weapons used for the assassination of members of reigning houses, or of great personages, as well as any surgical instruments employed in treating their injuries, or for purposes of post-mortem examination and embalmment, were filed away or ground to pieces. When, however, the priest, Martin Merino, attempted to murder Queen Isabella of Spain, in 1852, as she was entering the Metropolitan Church of the Attoccha, in order to undergo the ceremony of churching after the birth of her eldest daughter, it was found that the blade of the poniard which he had used to wound her majesty was of such exquisitely tempered steel that it resisted every file and stone.

This was related in the newspapers of the day, and the superstitious Spaniards became so excited about the matter that the cabinet was forced to occupy itself about the affair and to take steps for the destruction of the knife by means of sulphuric acid in order to allay public feeling and to remove the impression that there was something supernatural and magic about the dagger.

Since then sulphuric acid has always been used for purposes of this kind, the most recent instances being in the cases of the revolver with which Golli assassinated the Spanish premier, Canovas; the knife with which the would-be assassin of King Humbert so terribly wounded his prime minister, Cardoli; the gun with which King George of Greece was shot at a year ago, and the pistol with which an attempt was made to take the life of the late King Alfonso of Spain.

Character in Everything.

Every time you pull a door-bell you register what manner of person you are. It is seldom that two rings are alike. The housewife recognizes each—the impatient man, who pulls the bell twice in quick succession, and does not wait long before trying it again; the one of more phlegmatic temperament, whose ring is slower and more substantial; the hesitating woman, who draws the knob out in a succession of nervous jerks; the seedy individual with matches to sell, who stretches the wire carefully to its full length, and then allows it to relax with a faint, apologetic tinkle; and the jolly friend who knows he is welcome, and therefore grasps the knob with a hearty swing that is fairly eloquent with good nature, and sets the bell to shaking its sides with such peals of echoing laughter that it positively cannot stop at once, but subsides gradually with a merry irrepressible little titter. A door-bell has as many voices as visitors.

The Sawfish.

More energetic than any other sharks are the sawfish, whose snouts are prolonged into a broad blade of cartilage, which is horizontal when the fish is swimming in a normal position, and has both its edges set with slightly curved teeth about an inch apart. The end of this formidable-looking weapon is blunt and comparatively soft, so that it is quite incapable of the feats popularly attributed to it of piercing whales' bodies, ships' timbers, etc. It attacks other fish by a swift lateral thrust of the saw beneath them, the keen edge disemboweling them. Then it feeds upon the soft entrails, which are apparently the only food it can eat from the peculiar shape of its mouth. It has an enormous number of small teeth, sometimes as many as fifty rows in one individual, but they are evidently unfit for the rough duties required of their teeth by the garbage-eating members of the family.—National Review.

Wanted to Bottle the Baby.

The naturalist's wife had gone out for a few minutes and left the baby in charge of the absent-minded husband. When she returned she was not a little disturbed to discover the baby crying dismally, and its father, with a collection of his largest bottles of alcohol before him, evidently at his wit's end. "Why, David, David!" cried the good woman, snatching up the child, "what is the matter?" "Well, my dear," responded the great naturalist, simply, still gazing at the baby, "it's very strange, but I can't find a bottle large enough to hold him anywhere."

Social Changes.

A hundred years ago a fashionable evening gathering was called a "drum," a figure taken from a closely packed drum of figs; a very extensive entertainment of the same nature was known as a "rout," from a Welsh word signifying a crowd, and, as the fun of such soirees "grew fast and furious," they were termed "hurricanes," in allusion to the hurry, bustle, and confusion which were their distinctive characteristics. Some say the drum was so called because rival hostesses vied with each other in beating up guests.

Diamonds Found at Babylon.

The ruins of Babylon have for years been the searching grounds of antiquarians and others. It is said that visitors to these wonderful ruins have recovered over 400 diamonds. Many of them are uncut and the majority are polished on one or two sides only.

Newly Discovered Sulphur Deposits.

Important deposits of sulphur have lately been discovered in Asiatic Russia. In the Ferghana district there is one which will yield about 10,000 pounds of pure sulphur yearly.

Love in a cottage is but another name for a labor union.

Anchored.

"Up in my den," said a New Orleans bachelor, who lives in a couple of quaintly furnished rooms in a business block down town, "between the fireplace and the first bookcase on the left you will find two large slippers nailed to the wall, some four feet above the wainscoting. The heels of the slippers are quite close together, the toes spread slightly outward, and being made of brightly flowered drugget they look not unlike two enormous particolored beetles, clinging to the wall with folded wings. They are not, however, intended as ornaments, but have a very homely and practical purpose.

"When I retreat to my den at night, take down the book that suits my mood, get into a comfortable, ragged old jacket, turn the lamp just right and light my pipe—when I have performed these preliminary ceremonies, I place a chair directly in front of the slippers, insert my feet in their depths and lean back with the blissful consciousness that I can't possibly tip over and break my neck. I am anchored, so to speak, to the wall, and the light is so arranged as to make the position the best possible one for reading. My friends claim that the habit is pulling out my legs to an abnormal length, but I don't let that worry me. I'm thinking of having the scheme copyrighted."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Our One Good Point.

The English woman was arraigning America and everything American and to an American. "Your bed springs are uncomfortable," she said, "I never slept in a comfortable bed the whole time I was in the States. And your breakfasts—such great, overfed meals as they are! I don't see how you live, breakfasting as you do. As for your American voices, well, they go without saying, or rather they won't go with saying, but so many more eloquent than I have so often scored you upon that point I won't pretend to compete. Of all the many dreadful things about America, though, there's nothing so bad as your voices."

"Can't you think of something good about us?" came in a still, small voice from the American. "Haven't we a single redeeming quality?"

The English woman thought a bit. "Well, yes, you have one," she said in the tone of one who is making a great concession, "and that is your little elastic bands. They are so convenient, and they seem to be so plentiful. I never saw so many in all my life as I did in the States. I must confess that to my mind very many of your worst traits are more than made up for by your little elastic bands."—New York Sun.

Milton and Dante's Heaven.

Milton's heaven is earthly and obvious, though with none but celestial inhabitants; where eve and morn succeed each other and "grateful twilight" has its appointed hour; where the trees

Of life ambrosial fruitage bear, and vines whose angels sleep "fanned with cool winds" in their celestial tabernacles and eat not seemingly "nor in mist," but "with keen dispatch of real hunger" verging on excess, from any injurious effects of which, as the poet takes pains to tell us, their spiritual nature avails to save them. Dante's heaven is no less definite and orderly to its minutest detail, but mystical and ethereal, even while peopled by the sons and daughters of earth, passing from glory to glory in ascending brightness, with divine visions that come and go like stars in a cloudy night and attended by the music of the spheres. These are the two extremes between which lesser poets paint and plant their Edens.—Gentleman's Magazine.
Yield nectar;

Consumption and Canaries.

We do not in this paragraph allude to the islands to which people fly for the cure of consumption, but to the little birds which sing songs to us in their captivity, and are, according to Dr. Tucker Wise, a cause from which consumption comes. This gentleman says that from his own observation he is of opinion that in many instances diseased cage birds, such as canaries, communicate tuberculosis to a serious extent among human beings. As about 400,000 canaries are reputed to be sold every year in the United Kingdom, and as it is stated that tuberculosis is one of the most common diseases of birds, it does not seem unlikely that the canary may have considerable influence in the distribution of tuberculous infection.—London Hospital.

Egotistical.

"The trouble with him," said the young man who had been trying to fittingly describe an acquaintance, "is that when he dipped into the sea of knowledge he thought he brought up so much that the blamed thing went dry."—Chicago Post.

YOUNG AT SIXTY.

Serene comfort and happiness in advanced years are realized by comparatively few women.

Their hard lives, their liability to serious troubles on account of their peculiar organism and their profound ignorance concerning themselves, all combine to shorten the period of usefulness and fill their later years with suffering.

Mrs. Pinkham has done much to make women strong. She has given advice to many that has shown them how to guard against disease and retain vigorous health in old age. From every corner of the earth there is constantly coming the most convincing statements from women, showing the efficacy of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in overcoming female ills. Here is a letter from Mrs. J. C. Orms, of 220 Horner St., Johnstown, Pa., which is earnest and straight to the point:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I feel it my duty to tell all suffering women that I think your remedies are wonderful. I had trouble with my head, dizzy spells and hot flashes. Feet and hands were cold, was very nervous, could not sleep well, had kidney trouble, pain in ovaries and congestion of the womb. Since taking your remedies I am better every way My head trouble is all gone, have no pain in ovaries, and am cured of womb trouble. I can eat and sleep well and am gaining in flesh. I consider your medicine the best to be had for female troubles."

The present Mrs. Pinkham's experience in treating female ills is unparalleled, for years she worked side by side with Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham, and for sometime past has had sole charge of the correspondence department of her great business, treating by letter as many as a hundred thousand ailing women during a single year.

"I'm willing, sis," he answered, looking at her pinched waist, "if you'll let me buy your belts and fasten them around you."—Youth's Companion.

Enlarged Prostate Cured.

The Bane of Old Age No Longer To Be Dreaded.

A Man Eighty-two Years of Age Cured In Dixie, Ark

One of the oldest and best known men in Perry County has the satisfaction of enjoying perfect health after suffering for more than fifteen years with chronic prostatic enlargement and inflammation, and will cheerfully tell anyone how he was cured.

MR. H. L. TRUNDLE.

We want this to reach the eyes of every reader of this paper. Mr. H. L. Trundle, Dixie, Ark., is eighty-two years of age, as hale and hearty a man of his age as can be found in the State of Arkansas; in fact, he looks as young as a man of sixty years. For more than fifteen years Mr. Trundle was a slave to prostatic disease. You men who are afflicted know what it means—the days of unrest, the nights of torture and uneasiness, the pain, the frequent calls to pass water and the inability to do so. He could scarcely get about the house, feeble, trembling and racked with pain from bead to foot.

In this condition he read the startling announcement in his paper that a marvelous new method for curing prostatic disease had been discovered. He wrote to the address given for full particulars, and at once obtained the remedy; in less than ten days more he had the satisfaction of experiencing relief. His case was chronic, deep seated, and the chances of recovery on account of his age were against him. Yet sixty days of continuous use of the famous Solvent-Alterans method cured him.

You men who are afflicted can have the same experience if you do what Mr. Trundle did; be used Solvent-Alterans, a new-method treatment. It is described in two nicely written books which you can get free of charge, by mail, by sending your name and address to the Empire Medical Company, 215 M, Smith Building, Boston, Mass. It won't cost you a cent to get the information, and it may be worth hundreds to you. Write to-day, and refer to this article.

An American in Rome was asked by a friend at home to bring back some Italian fireworks. Upon arrival the returned tourist presented his friend with half a dozen ordinary bedroom candles. "What on earth are these," asked the friend. "Italian fireworks," said the other, "Roman candles. I purloined them at the hotel where I lived."—National Hotel Reporter.

The driver of a prison-van was recently hailed by a would-be wag: "Got any room inside Robert?" "There's room for one," replied the driver; "we kep' it for you." Not entirely disconcerted, the would-be wag had another shot. "What's your fare?" he asked. The answer, however, completely extinguished him. "Bread and water—same as you had before," said the driver.

Scientific Forecasting.

The first attempt at scientific forecasting of the weather was the result of a storm which during the Crimean war, Nov. 14, 1854, almost destroyed the fleets of France and England. As a storm had raged several days earlier in France, investigations were made, which showed that the two were in reality one storm, and that its path could have been ascertained and the fleet forewarned in ample time to reach safety.

The wages of sin defies alike the hard times and monopolies.

Society Women

and, in fact, nearly all women who undergo a nervous strain, are compelled to regretfully watch the growing pallor of their cheeks, the coming wrinkles and thinness that become more distressing every day.

Every woman knows that ill-health is a fatal enemy to beauty and that good health gives to the plainest face an enduring attractiveness. Pure blood and strong nerves—these are the secret of health and beauty.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People build up and purify the blood and strengthen the nerves. To the young girl they are invaluable, to the mother they are a necessity, to the woman approaching fifty they are the best remedy that science has devised for this crisis of her life.

Mrs. Jacob Weaver, of Bushnell, Ill., is fifty-six years old. She says: "I suffered for five or six years with the trouble that comes to women at this time of life. I was much weakened, was unable, much of the time, to do my own work, and suffered beyond my power to describe. I was downhearted and melancholy. Nothing seemed to do me any good. Then I made up my mind to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People.

I bought the first box in March, 1897, and was benefited from the start. A box and a half cured me completely, and I am now rugged and strong."—Bushnell (Ill.) Record.

Poor Chance For Poets.

A poet is cross with me because I decline firmly to read his manuscripts and advise him as to the desirableness of taking to verse with all his young energy. Other poets may take a statistical view of their case. Let them consider the estimated population of the globe. How many of them have justified their conduct in being poets? At this hour is there one such being anywhere? Suppose, for the sake of argument, that there are six. How many millions to one is it against the success of the neophyte? But, if versify he must, let him send his work to all the editors. If they think his poems worth printing (and paying for), then let him make friends with certain young critics, who will blow his trumpet before him. But do not let him bother busy old men, who, by reason of their age, are no longer good judges.—Andrew Lang in Longman's Magazine.

To Have Pleasure.

Of course we live to have pleasure and to avoid pain, and that is why so many use St. Jacobs Oil to cure Rheumatism, quickly and surely to get rid of it. It is the best cure.

Accepted the Amendment.

Joseph Jefferson, at a dinner in New York, said that when called upon for a curtain speech in New Haven Billy Florence once delivered himself thus: "It is here and to you, ladies and gentlemen, that I owe my present success in my profession. We knew each other when boys and girls. We played marbles together under the shadow of the old church, and now to receive this warm welcome from old friends—what can I say? Simply that I never can forget the people of Hartford." A man in the front row said, "This is New Haven, Mr. Florence." "I mean New Haven, of course," said Florence gravely.

A little hand lies on my knee,
Two trustful eyes look up to me,
A thrill the childless cannot know
Sets all my quickened blood aglow.

And so 'tis given me to feel
What power is in this soft appeal,
While these bright eyes his mother gave
Are holding me a willing slave.

This little, five-leaved, rosy fist,
By loving lips so often kissed!
Was ever force more beautiful?
Can strength in greater beauty hide?

Unsteady are his steps just now,
But when white locks lie on my brow,
And age creeps on with vision dim,
My waning strength may trust in him.

Then he will be the strong, and I
The weak and trusting one; I sigh
To think it, but I see that day,
And acquiesce in Nature's way.

For thus the links of life connect,
In love we give, and so expect
That love and life will ever spring
Where hearts and hopes their treasures bring.

And so in giving and receiving
Is found the best and sweetest living;
So life to life renewal gives,
And in the young the parent lives.

Whate'er may come of good or ill,
'Tis good to have these loved ones fill
The measure of domestic joy—
My sweetheart-wife, my bouncing boy!

THE EXTRAVAGANCE OF DAN.

"To think," exclaimed Farmer Biggs, solemnly, as in either hand he held upright the carving knife and fork, their butts resting upon the table-cloth; "to think as I should 'a' raised up a boy to be as extravagant as this!"

Aunt Annabel shook her head sorrowfully; Mrs. Biggs gave a low moan of grief, and little 'Liz'beth, with eyes big and wondering, stared full at her brother Dan.

Dan himself stood beside the breakfast table, half defiant, more than half embarrassed, and feeling uncommonly like a fish out of water. It was Sunday morning, and Dan, who had driven to town the evening before and returned late, had just sprung a genuine surprise upon the family circle.

"Jest look," continued his father, severely, as he pointed full at the culprit with the carving knife, "at that red shirt an' high dude collar!"

"It ain't red," protested Dan, eagerly. "It's pink, with white stripes."

"An' the blue necktie!" gasped Aunt Annabel, with another reproachful shake of her head.

"An' the bran' new suit!" said Dan's mother, striving to conceal the tone of pride that crept into her voice.

"An' oh, Pop!—look at his shoes!" cried little 'Liz'beth, clapping her hands.

They all looked down at Dan's feet, and stared in amazement at the shiny, patent-leathers that glistened in all their newness.

"'Twere my money," said Dan, the blood surging into his round, beardless face, "an' I don't know as it's anybody's business 'cept mine. Can't a feller be a gentleman if he wants to?"

"Not with them hands," said his father, sternly.

Dan looked down at the big, red fists that hung far out of his sleeves, and then put them behind his back.

"Ner with them feet," declared Aunt Annabel with evident contempt. Dan shifted them uneasily.

"Ner with that head o' hair," said his mother, critically. Dan's hands sought his head, and he ran his fingers slowly through the sandy shock of hair that adorned it.

"You can cut it, can't ye, mar?" he asked, anxiously.

"I kin, o' course," replied Mrs. Biggs, "but I dunno as it would be a Christian act to encourage you in your foolish extravagance."

"Foolish ain't no name for it," announced Mr. Biggs; "it's downright wicked."

"'Twere my money," repeated Dan, but the tears stood in his blue eyes as he realized the impossibility of justifying himself to his unsympathetic friends.

"You set down here an' eat your breakfast," said his mother, giving her husband a warning look; "we'll see about that hair-cut afterward."

Dan meekly took his place at the table, and the meal proceeded in silence, although 'Liz'beth could not keep her admiring eyes off her big brother.

"Arter you've finished, Dan'l," said his father, as he rose from his chair, "I'll see you in the barn."

Dan's appetite was indifferent, and as he pushed back from the table, his mother said:

"Come over here by the winder, son, an' I'll see what can be done with that hair. Father can wait a bit, I guess."

Dan removed his coat and sat down obediently by the window. Mrs. Biggs took her scissors out of the work basket, and pinned a calico apron around Dan's neck.

"The suit ain't so bad," she said, musingly; "it looks like good stuff, an' it's pretty well made."

"Mr. Blodgett said it was the latest style," remarked Dan, proudly.

"Oh, you got it over to Blodgett's store, did you. How much did it cost, Dan?"

"Never you mind, mar," said Dan, falling back upon his original defense; "I earned the money."

Mrs. Biggs sighed and snipped busily away with the scissors.

"I'm glad you wasn't reckless enough to go to one of them barber fellers over town," she said.

"Oh, I were reckless 'nough; 'twarn't that, mar. I clean forgot all about it."

"I'm afraid, Dan'l," sighed Aunt Annabel, "that you're gittin' into bad ways. I never knew your father to spend so much money at one time in his life. It must 'a' cost a heap."

Dan was silent and the scissors clipped away briskly, until Mrs. Biggs announced the job was complete to her satisfaction.

"Now for pop," said Dan, and he put on his coat and walked resolutely to the barn. His father sat upon an upturned pail in moody reflection, and when his son halted before him he looked up and said:

"Dan, I allus tried to be a good father to you. When you come 21 this spring I let the hired man go an' took you in his place—on half wages. 'Tain't ev'ry father would 'a' done that. An' when you come to me last night an' wanted fifteen dollars, I made sure you was goin' to put it in the bank. Sech a thought as your spendin' of it recklessly never entered my head. Whatever made you do it. Dan—whatever made you do it?"

"Loon here, pop; we've had 'bout 'nough o' this kind o' talk," said Dan, with spirit; "I've worked steady an' I've earned the money, an' it's my business. I'd got tired o' them baggy old clo's an' home-made shirts, an' made up my mind I'd dress as a feller should dress; an' now it's did, an' there's no backin' out. So you jest take it quiet an' let it pass."

"Well, well," said Mr. Biggs, after a little thought, "you never did sech a thing afore, an' so we'll let it pass, as you say. Mebbe it'll be a good lesson to you."

He arose from his seat, as if to indicate that the interview was at an end, but Dan hung around as though there was something more he wished to say. Finally he mustered up courage to ask:

"Kin I take the brown mare an' the top buggy to drive to church?"

"The top buggy! Air ye too proud to ride wi' the rest of us in the wagin?"

"I thought I'd go over to the Larkinsville church this mornin'."

"An' why?" questioned his father in surprise. "Ain't the church at the Corners good enough fer you?"

"Oh, it's good 'nough; but all the best folks go to Larkinsville."

"The rich farmers as live on the turnpike go there," said his father, sharply, "but you ain't got no call to associate with the Larkins an' Pentons an' Abbeys. Why, they's stick up their noses at the son o' a poor farmer like me."

"Anyhow," persisted Dan, stubbornly, I'd like to go."

"Then go!" growled the farmer; "you'll know more the next time. I s'pose you want to show off them new clo's—an' the red shirt."

So Dan drove over to the Larkinsville church, and, strange to say, seemed in high spirits on his return. And on Monday morning he put on his old clothes again and went to work with his usual energy and good will.

During the week, Farmer Larkins, reputed the richest man in the county, rode up to the Biggs farm to arrange for the purchase of some milch cows. While he was talking with Dan's father the boy passed by and touched his hat respectfully to the great man.

"That's a good lad you have there," said Mr. Larkins, looking after him; "he was over to our church Sunday an' set in our pew; an' Sally 'lowed as he was the best behaved young man at the meetin'."

Mr. Biggs reddened with pleasure at this praise from so high an authority.

"Dan's a rare worker," he said, "an' I'm payin' him half wages now for takin' the hired man's place. He'll make a right smart farmer one o' these days."

"Yes," replied Mr. Larkins, thoughtfully, "he has a likely look. I wish I had a son like him," and he mounted his gray nag and rode slowly away.

The next Sunday there was no opposition to Dan's driving the bay mare to the Larkinsville church, and Mrs. Biggs was really proud of her boy as she watched him drive away, so sprucely dressed in his new clothes. It was nearly dark when he returned, but no one questioned him, and he made no explanation as to what had detained him.

And so the summer passed away, and Sunday became Dan's day off. Sometimes he would not return until the family was in bed, and his father and mother spoke to each other anxiously about his "carryin's on" and feared his bad habits were growing on him. But Dan's newly developed stubbornness restrained them from remonstrating seriously.

Dan asked permission to attend the county fair in October, and to drive the brown mare with the top buggy, and his father reluctantly consented. But when the young man, after much hesitation, asked for two dollars to spend, Mr. Biggs firmly refused.

"Fifty cents was all I ever spent at a fair when I was a boy," he said, "an' to chuck away two dollars for sech nonsense would be downright sinful. I'll give you 50 cents if you want it, but no more."

Dan looked him straight in the eye.

"There's about twenty dollars comin' to me, ain't there?" he asked.

"'Bout that. But I ain't goin' to encourage you in extravagant habits."

"I'll trouble you for two dollars," said Dan, white with anger, "or I'll take what's due me an' you can find another hand. I'm 21, an' I'm my own master."

His father eyed him curiously a moment, but he saw Dan was in earnest, and so with a groan of protest he took the money from his pocket, and gave it to him.

"I s'pose you're goin' to take that red-headed gal o' Jenkinses with you, an' squander the money buyin' her peanuts an' candy," he said spitefully; "them red-headed gals has ruined more men than you, Dan. But I see you're headed for destruction, an' you must go your own bent."

Dan did not reply. He put the money in his pocket, climbed into the buggy and drove away without a word.

After that Dan got into the habit of absenting himself more than one evening in the week, and his parents became so worried that Mr. Biggs began praying earnestly for him at family prayers.

But nothing seemed to move Dan; even the prayers were ineffectual to stop him in what Aunt Annabel called his down'ard course."

One morning in December, Dan, having returned exceptionally late the preceding evening, remarked calmly at the breakfast table:

"You'd better look up a hired man, pop; I'm goin' to be married New Year's Day."

If a bomb had been exploded in their midst the Biggs family could not have been more startled.

His mother lay back in her chair and stared with eyes and mouth wide open; Aunt Annabel screamed and scared little 'Liz'beth into tears, and the farmer uttered words under his breath.

Mrs. Biggs recovered herself first.

"Who to, Dan?" she inquired, breathlessly.

"To Sally Larkins."

"Sally Larkins!" they echoed, with one voice.

"Why, she's the richest gal in the county," said Aunt Annabel, in amazement.

"An' the prettiest!" said 'Liz'beth.

Dan caught his little sister in his arms and kissed her rapturously.

"An' she's an only child!" cried his mother, as the importance of the announcement came home to her.

"Dan," said his father, rising from the able and trembling with excitement, "I'll see you in the barn arter you're through your breakfast."

Dan kissed his mother and Aunt Annabel and 'Liz'beth with happiness shining from every feature of his round face, and then he sought his father.

"Dan," said that parent, impressively, "how air you goin' to support a wife, to say nothin' o' supportin' yourself?"

"Mr. Larkins has promised to give us the Downs Farm for a weddin' present. There ain't no better piece o' land in the county."

Mr. Biggs sat silently upon the upturned pail, evidently engaged in deep thought.

"Dan," he said, at length, "I may have kicked a little at yer extravygence now an' then, but let bygones be bygones. A business deal is a business deal, an' to tell you the truth, that bit o' money o' yourn were mighty well invested."

MOUSE ON A MONUMENT.

Explorers Find a Rodent 10,000 Feet Above the Sea.

When the vanguard of the recent Mazama expedition to the summit of Mount St. Helens arrived at the top of the mountain they moved some of the fragments of rocks to get at the box containing the record of mountain climbers who had reached the peak. This disturbed a mouse that had his habitation in that desolate spot and to escape from the men who were taking such unauthorized liberties with his home he left the two or three square yards of rocks and scampered out over the snow that stretched an unbroken surface away on all sides. There he was easily caught and Charles H. Sholes brought the timid creature back to Portland with him. The mouse took kindly to his new environment and is alive and flourishing now, not having suffered any appreciable discomfort by the great change in the altitude of his abiding place. The top of the mountain is nearly 10,000 feet above the sea.

The rodent is described as rather large for a wood mouse, having very large ears and a very long tail, being the usual mouse color above and white underneath. He is active and silent, but watchful. He is believed to be of the same kind as the mouse found a few years ago on the top of Mount Hood. His description has been sent to Professor Merriam, who was to have been the biologist of the expedition but failed to make connections in time. If he shall find the little beast to be a new mountain climber a special examination will be made into his case and the mouse may become famous and have his portrait in the learned books of science.—Portland Oregonian.

A COSTLY DINNER.

First of Expensive Entertainments in New York.

Writing of the lavish expenditures of New Yorkers, Euretta Van Vorst recalls, in the Ladies' Home Journal, a dinner given in 1884 by a man of wealth which cost $10,000, and which astonished his most extravagant associates, as it was the most expensive feast given up to that time.

"Delmonico, the helpful resource of both those who know and those who do not know how to spend their money, was at a loss to know how to dispose of this then fabulous amount upon a single meal. There were seventy-two guests, and they were entertained in the large ballroom which in Delmonico's Fourteenth street establishment has seen so many social triumphs. The house had been Moses Grinnell's, and ever bore the imprint of a gentleman's residence even when transformed into a public place of entertainment. The table occupied the whole length and breadth of the room; the waiters had barely space to move about it. It was a long, oval table, round which a massive wreath of exquisite flowers was laid guarding a miniature lake thirty feet long. The water, by mechanical contrivance, undulated gently, and on its breast floated four living swans, a golden network keeping them in place."

We often think that people should pay less attention to society, and more to being comfortable, in winter.

Bald-headed friends find it difficult to part.

CHAT OF THE CHURCH

WHAT IS GOING ON IN THE RELIGIOUS WORLD.

News Notes from All Lands Regarding Their Religious Thought and Movement—What the Great Denominations Are Doing.

AS in good King David's time, so now, people sneeringly ask a believer, "Where is your God?" What would you answer, young Christian? Here is the reply of Vadivelu, a servant boy, a converted Hindu:

"My god can be seen by every one," said a Hindu who wanted to confuse and deride him; "for he is there at the end of the street. What is the use of a god you can't see?"

Then the boy asked a question in turn: "Have you ever seen the tax-collector?"

"Yes, often," said the Hindu.

"The Governor?"

"Well, rarely."

"Ah!" rejoined Vadivelu, triumphantly, "the little people you can see any day, but the great people seldom or never. We can see your gods in street corners, because they are such little ones, but Christ, our God, the Great and True, is in the heavens. We cannot see Him now, but those who love Him here shall see Him hereafter."

As Others See Us.

What a man gives out, not what he keeps, determines his appearance in the eyes of the world. Beauty, brightness, color, consist not in what a thing keeps, but what it gives out. A well-known law of optics teaches us that a thing is seen, not in the color which it takes in and keeps, but in that color which it gives back again. The thing that we call red is the one which is, in one sense, blue; that is, it takes in the blue rays and keeps them for itself, but gives back the red ones in color. Gold has kept all the green rays and gives back the yellow ones, so we think it is yellow. The object which we call black takes in every ray of light and keeps them for itself, and we have strikingly enough seen in it the symbol of all evil. The object which we call white keeps nothing of the sun rays, but gives them all out again, and we have seen in it the symbol of all good. So a man is seen and known, not by what he receives and keeps for himself, but for what he gives forth to others. The rich man who keeps everything for himself is seen and known to be a poor, mean man. The wise man who holds haughtily his learning to himself will, in the judgment of men, be very apt to seem a proud fool.—Sunday School Times.

Conquering by Gentleness.

Children, beware of judging any but yourselves, as ye love God and your souls and everlasting happiness. A man should judge nothing that is not a plain mortal sin. I would rather bite my tongue that it bleed than judge any man. One should leave this to the eternal judgment of God; for from man's judgment upon his neighbors there grows a complacency in one's self, an evil arrogance and a contempt for one's neighbors.

In all doubtful cases, consider the matter with sincerity and earnestness, and choose that course which you see to be the most bitter to nature and to which you feel the least inclined. For I tell thee, dear child, if thou couldst conquer thyself by long suffering and gentleness and the pureness of thy heart, thou wouldst have vanquished all thine enemies. It would be better for thee than if thou hadst won the hearts of all the world by thy writings and wisdom, and hadst miserably destroyed thine own soul by passing judgment on thy neighbors.—John Tauler.

Help the Poor Gladly.

If there be among you a poor man of one of thy brethren within any of thy gates in thy land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, thou shalt not harden thine heart, nor shut thine hand from thy poor brother; but thou shalt open thine hand wide unto him, and shalt surely lend him sufficient for his need, in that which he wanteth. Thou shalt surely give him, and thine heart shall not be grieved when thou givest unto him; because that for this thing the Lord thy God shall bless thee in all thy works, and in all that thou puttest thine hand unto. For the poor shall never cease out of the land; therefore I command thee, saying Thou shalt open thine hand wide unto thy brother, to thy poor, and to thy needy, in thy land.—Deut. xv., 7-11.

Every Man in His Place.

Every one of us has his own work to do. No man has the work of his predecessor to perform; no more has he to do the work of his successor. Elisha may take up Elijah's mantle; but the mantle's new wearer is Elisha and not Elijah. Elijah would have failed in Elisha's place; and Elisha would be sure to fail if he were to try and to be and do just like Elijah. The same is true of every new prophet, or preacher or worker or waiter in God's vineyard. God has a place and a mission for every one. It is for each one to find what God would have him do in his day and place, and then do that with all his might and at once. God wants no man to do less than this, or to do more.—Sunday School Times.

COREA AND ITS PEOPLE.

They Have Queer Customs and Curious Characteristics.

Corea is a splendid country. The summer in three-fourths of the provinces is bright, bracing and temperate, not unlike that of Nova Scotia. In any case the hot weather and mosquitoes do not last more than a month or two at the utmost. The winter is clear and very cold, rather like that of New York, or perhaps Quebec. Taken as a whole the land is fertile, and the rice especially "has a bone in it," which turns out tough natives and makes it very highly esteemed even in Japan. Its bean crop also is enormous, and it has a plentiful supply of gold, cattle, tobacco, hemp, paper, leather, vegetables, fish and medicine. The inhabitants are clean made, erect, active walkers, with a physique perhaps not so wiry, but far superior in grace to that of either the Chinese or the Japanese; not so coarse and uncouth in movement as the German physique; perhaps more like that of the Spaniards in general build than that of any other European nation. Women are kept in seclusion, and one sees none but old hags in the market places. The men are great eaters, indefatigable marchers, ready drinkers when they can get liquor, interminable smokers and very quarrelsome. But they are lazy, except under stimulus; calm and deliberate, except under provocation; obstinate, destitute of moral feeling, full of natural religious emotion, while recognizing no religious sanctions; dirty in person, thievish, cunning, untrustworthy, but affectionate and loyal if kindly treated.

They are without the simpering politeness of the Chinese or the obsequious ceremony of the Japanese. "Good form" is imperturbable placidity, deliberation and taciturnity. Not even a Turk can approach a Corean in perfect calm and restfulness of attitude. The trading instinct seems good and will develop, but, of course, lack of experience and organization keeps it backward. The agricultural laborer works well, and would be hard-working if the fruits of his labor were secured to him. Party feelings runs wonderfully high among the official classes, who are corrupt almost to a man, cruel and full of fierce personal hatreds; but both civil and military mandarins are often exceedingly refined in manner. I never saw more perfect manners in any country than those of the general at Torai, who entertained me in the most princely fashion. His palace was scrupulously clean, but plainly furnished; his clothes were of the finest possible texture; his hands and nails clean, his hat and "button" a marvel of "basket work," art and jewel carving; in short, his whole bearing, as also the wine and sweetmeats he gave me, showed the utmost refinement and good taste.—Fortnightly Review.

A Truthful Kindergartner.

Two little boys from a kindergarten in Boston went into a barber's shop to have their hair cut. Two men were there awaiting their turn. An exchange tells a good story of what happened.

The barber said to one of the boys: "Run over to the store across the street and see if my assistant is there. Tell him to hurry up and come back, there are four men waiting."

The boy went, found the man, and gave the message, except that he said there were two men and two boys waiting. Then he added: "The barber told me to say four men, but I wasn't going to tell a lie for two men."

"Why not?" asked the man.

"Why," responded the boy, "don't you suppose we have a picture of George Washington over in our kindergarten?"

The teacher declares that she shall tell the story of the "cherry-tree" with renewed interest and frequency.

Genuine Diamonds.

There is an easy, simple way to tell if a diamond is genuine. Make a small dot on a piece of paper with a lead pencil, and look at it through the diamond. If it shows but a single dot the diamond is genuine. If it shows more than one, or the mark appears scattered, it is false, no matter what it cost.

WHEN WOMAN LOVES BEST.

THE typical American girl often blooms into premature young womanhood, and falls in love before she makes her "teens." When the girl in her teens falls in love, however well developed her physical charms may be, her powers of loving are yet immature. A young girl is fascinated by a man and she allows her sentiment to dominate her good sense. She mistakes her soul of being loved for the love of a lover. After the honeymoon is over, and the realities of life begin to engage the attention of both parties, the wife sees the man as he is—a mere boy often, who, save in the role of Romeo, is utterly devoid of interest or attraction and who is quite her inferior in every respect. It is then the tragedy of life begins for her.

A woman of 28 or 32 judges men from an entirely different standpoint, and is capable of a depth of feeling wholly unknown to the girl of 18 or 20. Her nature is riper, her emotions more intense, her judgments more mature.

An old lady of 70 told a stranger she had been three times married. She seemed greatly surprised when the lady remarked: "And you loved your second husband best of the three?"

"Yes," she said, "but how did you know?"

That conclusion was formed on general principles. The woman who has been married three times usually begins early—too early to know what real love is. Her choice is usually one of caprice or accident. Her second marriage would under ordinary circumstances occur in the thirties, and it would be a marriage based on strong magnetic attraction. The third husband would more than likely be selected merely as a companion for her declining years; one to whom she gave respect and affection, but not ardent love.

Of course, we find people who have wedded in very early life and loved until an old age; but those cases are rare. Were statistics made of the greatest and most enduring passions the world has ever known, no doubt it would be found that the women lovers were nearly always past twenty-five; and as a rule a man's second wife and a woman's second husband usually receive more love than the first.—Democrat and Chronicle.

was drawn into her anti-capital punishment crusade by the circumstance of the execution of Carter Martin, who was hanged on Dec. 16 for murder. The horror of that affair so deeply stirred her human sympathies that she has since been unable to rest. To relieve the stress she labored under she prepared a petition addressed to the legislature now in session asking that capital punishment be abolished. Copies of the instrument were circulated over the State and thousands signed it.

Married Life in Albania.

An Albanian woman expects to be beaten if she misbehaves, this being the prerogative of the Albanian husband. He must be careful, however, not to draw blood during his castigation, or the wife can complain to the authorities, who will fine the husband and give his property to his wife. When an Albanian marries he is bound to provide his wife with food, clothes, and a home in keeping with his station and means, and cannot require her to earn money for herself or him by her labor. Divorce is quite common.

LADY BLACKWOOD.

The Art of Crying.

"Very few women know how to cry properly," said a cold-blooded observer, "but if they realize how potent tears are as a weapon they would spare no pains in trying to shed them gracefully. As a rule brunettes cry much better than blondes. I call to mind, for instance, a very pretty little lady who was a litigant in court some years ago, and who wept when a certain portion of the testimony was reached. As the critical moment approached her eyes began to swim. They seemed to grow larger and darker, and they took on a wistful and appealing look that made every man in the jury box feel as though he wanted to climb right out and hit the plaintiff with a club. Her lips were quivering and presently two great tears rolled softly down her cheeks. That settled it. I was foreman of the jury, and we were exactly a minute and a half in giving her a verdict. Now, if that had happened to some other woman, equally worthy, but of lighter complexion, the chances are her nose would have turned pink and her eyes would have assumed a slightly inflamed appearance that would have been—er—very damaging to her cause. If she had sniffed, as they usually do, I can't say what the result might have been. A woman who can cry artistically can have anything she wants. I'm surprised it isn't taught, like Delsarte movements."

About Calls.

A first call is made on the newcomer by the older resident without waiting for the formality of an introduction. It is returned within ten days. If the acquaintance proves undesirable, it may cease after the first interchange of visits.

The fashionable calling hour for ladies is from 11 to 12 and from 3 to 5. For men, from 8 to 10 when the day is occupied.

A formal or first call lasts fifteen minutes, a friendly call twice as long.

A man must ask permission before he may call, or bear a letter of introduction from another city.

An invitation to any entertainment, whether accepted or not, necessitates a call from the recipient within a month.

Calls should be made on the hostess' day, if she have one.

The guests of a dinner call upon their hostess within a week.

A bride does not call upon her friends until they have called upon her after the wedding reception.

Calls of congratulation are made on the young mother, the fiancee or a friend to whom unexpected joy or success have come.—The Ladies' World.

Take What You Can Get.

One of the most helpful qualities for the winning of success is that ability which enables one to take philosophically what one can get if one cannot get what one wants. That is, to be contented with second best if the best is unattainable.

It is certainly hard to be sufficiently philosophic to carry this principle into everyday practice, although to desire the unattainable is worse than foolish, and to know our limitations and to act accordingly insures a certain amount of success.

Young people especially cannot help feeling, for the time being at least, that the second best, or what they consider the best, is not worth the taking, and so opportunities are lost which can never be regained.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

FRIDAY, APRIL 21..... 1899

The Samoan incident is a lamentable one, one to be deplored by all men. But while it is woeful, and should have been among the improbabilities we have nothing to blame ourselves for in the matter. Bound in honor and by every obligation that a nation can assume, to maintain the treaty condtions regarding Samoa, we have acted precisely as the conditions and our duty commanded. The lawful authority under the treaty pointed out the rightful magistrate of the island group. A pretender attempted to usurp the seat of that magistrate and received such moral, if not material support from the representatives of the German Empire as to rise in arms against constituted authority. There was nothing else to do but to enforce the calls of the treaty and stand by the courts and the officials operating under the tripartite agreement. In this action England took equal part, the judgment of her statesmen and officials running parallel with ours. Unhappily the issue joined between constituted authority and the rebels has resulted in battles, and in the death in one of them of both officers and men of America and England, and will probably be followed by still other bloodshed. The position of Germany in the affair is most unfortunate. Either she has been betrayed and sadly misrepresented by her Samoan agents, or else they have acted under secret instructions, and the German Emperor has been playing a double game with his treaty colleagues. In that case a rupture of the good understanding between the three Powers is inevitable. Nations, no more than individuals, will put up with treachery or condone so gross an offense as violation of a solemn compact. But we are indisposed to think that Germany has been two faced. We prefer to hold and do believe that her officials in Samoa have acted without due authority, have misconceived their instructions and have rendered themselves liable to rebuke and punishment, which Germany will administer. The game was too small for a nation of the greatness of the German Empire to descend to mean things to bag. There is no reason in the suggestion that she would deliberately pick a quarrel with England and the United States for such comparatively small interests as she has in the Samoan group. While therefore a breaking up of Samoan relations between Germany and her colleagues is possible, we do not look upon such an outcome as probable. Diplomacy, wise statesmanship and cool, calm judgment will adjust the present difficulty. The nations cannot afford to come to blows over the matter. There is not enough in it to inspire greed or to suggest conquest by one at the expense of the others. As for the rebel chieftain, Mataafa, like his earlier example, Tamasesese, whom also the Germans favored as against old Malietoa, he will be put down and his savage followers taught a lesson in civilization they will not forget.

A corporal among the California Volunteers having been specially commended for his bravery, writes in a private letter from Manila as follows:

"We sleep all day here, as we do duty all night walking the streets. We make every one get into his house by 7 p. m., and we only tell a man once. If he refuses we shoot him. We killed over 300 men the first night. They tried to set the town on fire. If they fire a shot from a house we burn the house down and every house near it and shoot the natives, so they are pretty quiet in town now."

This is the matter-of-fact report of a young American citizen, written in apparently stolid unsonsciousness that to kill a man for once refusing to retire to his own house, or to commit arson or homicide by the wholesale as a punishment for individual acts is in any way inconsistent with the principles of his Government or the proprieties of American civilization.

Beginning on the second score of times the announcement is made that the President has fully determined to let Alger out of the War Department as soon as he returns from Cuba! These announcements have all been by authority, but somehow the Secretary does not go "worth a cent." It is said by just as good authority that there was a consideration for the appointment that precludes the President from doing anything more than to implore the Secretary to save the party by sacrificing himself, and Alger has not heretofore felt inclined to make the sacrifice—especially when there are so many fat contracts lying around loose! It is something to have the handling of half a billion when fifty million will cover the necessary outlay. That kind of a billet will not be laid down lightly—especially if it was paid for.

The Visalia Delta, a leading Republican newspaper, speaking through one of its proprietors and under his signature, says of the Republican governor of California: When Governor Gage was campaigning for the office he now occupies he said he only wished to be governor for one term. The course he is pursuing justifies the prediction that he will realize his desire. Some of Gage's acts have already brought the blush of shame to many Republicans.

Governor Gage's statement in a recent interview, "I have tried to free myself from the cares of State and to prepare myself for the future labor my office imposes," raises a question as to what are the duties of his office for which he can prepare himself by freeing his mind from cares of State.

The Call suggests that the Vanderbilt couple set fire to their honey-moon hall to show the Astors that the Vanderbilts have palaces to burn.

Washington's Tomb.

Washington was buried in what is now known as the old vault, which is perhaps 200 feet away from his present resting place. Before his death he had requested that a new family vault be constructed after his decease, and the reason given for this is that the earth upon the side of the hill where the old vault was placed was likely to slip away in the springtime.

No attention was apparently paid to this request, however, until about 1830, when an employee who had been discharged from the estate broke into the old tomb as an act of revenge and stole a skull which he supposed to be that of George Washington. This he took to Alexandria, and, as usual in such cases, "got drunk," and so his secret was discovered, and the skull, which proved to be that of Laurence Washington instead, was returned.

This incident led to the final carrying out of the wish of General Washington. The tomb which is his present resting place was promptly built, and in 1831 his remains were removed to it. The old vault was allowed to fall into a state of decay, and only a few years ago it was restored by the aid of drawings found in the congressional library. An iron fence has been built around it, and it now receives the same care as the new tomb.—Exchange.

A Greek Colony In Corsica.

At Cargese we have the remakable spectacle of a Greek population with its own church settled down on the coast of Corsica. Our inn is kept by a Greek from Corfu, as his name, Corfiotti, tells us and as the loquacity of his wife would lead us to infer; for at Cargese the Corsican taciturnity has given place to the Hellenic love of talk. Rather more than two centuries ago a Greek settlement was founded in Corsica under the auspices of the Genoese republic, to which the island at that time belonged, and when the French came into possession of the country they established the Hellenic exiles, who had meanwhile founded the Chapelle des Grecs just outside Ajaccio at Cargese and built them the church which they have ever since cherished.

Intermarriages between the colonists and the natives, at first rare, have now become frequent, and it is to be feared that the Greek language will soon become as extinct there as the fustanella. But with that wonderful tenacity which it shows in modern Greece, in spite of centuries of barbarian inroads and Turkish oppression, the Greek type is sure to remain at Cargese to remind the traveler of its eternal youth and its unfailing characteristics.—Westminster Review.

Julius Cæsar.

Of all great conquerors, writes Marion Crawford in "Studies From the Chronicles of Rome," he was the least cruel, for he never sacrificed human life without the direct intention of benefiting mankind by an increased social stability. Of all great lawgivers, he was the most wise and just, and the truths he set down in the Julian code are the foundation of modern justice. Of all great men who have leaped upon the world as upon an unbroken horse, who have guided it with relentless hands and ridden it breathless to the goal of glory, Cæsar is the only one who turned the race into the track of civilization and, dying, left mankind a future in the memory of his past. He is the one great man of all without whom it is impossible to imagine history. We cannot take him away and yet leave anything of what we have. The world could have been as it is without Alexander, without Charlemagne, without Napoleon. It could not have been the world we know without Caius Julius Cæsar.

It Was Ordered.

In the biography of Prince Bismarck it is said that when he was minister at St. Petersburg he was walking one morning in the summer garden and met the czar, who invited him to join him.

Presently Bismarck noticed a sentry stationed in the middle of a large grass plot and asked the aid-de-camp, who in turn inquired of the sentry.

"It is ordered," was his reply.

Every official gave the same answer, "It is ordered," but nobody knew by whom. A sentry had always stood guard in the middle of that innocent grass plot. The archives were searched, but in vain. At last an aged official was found, who had been told by his father that the Empress Catherine had once seen a snowdrop ready to bloom in the spot, and had ordered a sentry to stand guard and allow no one to pluck it. For more than a century the watch had been maintained because "it was ordered," and no one had ever thought of disobeying or of questioning the reason of the order.

Absolute Indifference.

A woman who has been a victim of indigestion and is kept to dyspeptics' diet most of the time was recently invited to a dinner, which she was anxious to attend.

She went to her telephone and, trusting to a somewhat unreliable memory, she asked to be connected by the ever obliging "central" with telephone 2394. When the connection had been made, she began her plaintive query, without any prefatory, "Is that you, doctor?"

"I want very much to go to a little dinner tomorrow night," she began rapidly, "and do you think it would hurt me if I ate just a taste of soup, and perhaps a little fish or the least trifle of game and a bit of salad or ice? I really think my stomach"—

Here she was interrupted by a voice from the other end of the wire.

"Madam," it said coldly, "eat whatever you please. This is the Meteor Rubber company."—Youth's Companion.

One of Toole's Jokes.

One of Toole's greatest practical jokes was as follows: He once gave a supper to 80 of his friends and wrote a note to each of them privately beforehand, asking him whether he would be so good as to say grace, as no clergyman would be present. It is said that the faces of those 80 men as they rose in a body when Toole tapped on the table as a signal for grace was a sight which will never be forgotten.

Bargain Decks.

Yes, it was the first time she had ever been on board a warship. "And this," the lieutenant went on to say, "is the quarter deck." "And that deck over yonder," she exclaimed, indicating the forecastle with a pretty gesture, "is that the 5 cent deck or the 10 cent deck?"—Detroit Journal.

A Porto Rican Shave.

The Porto Ricans, who are all, from their highest to the lowest, great dandies in their way, make soap out of cocoanut oil and homemade lye. And a fine soap it is, smooth and fragrant. This cocoanut oil soap is used for shaving. When a man wishes to have a shave in the morning, he starts out with his cocoanut shell cup and his donkey tail brush and bottle. It is never any trouble to find an empty bottle in Porto Rico, Cuba, Jamaica or almost any of the larger West India islands, even in remote spots in the mountains. At least 20 generations of thirsty people have lived there and thrown away the bottles.

The man carries no mirror. He is too poor to own such a luxury. Not one house in 20 in Porto Rico has even the very cheapest looking glass. But generally rich nature provides the mirror as well as the soap. The man goes to some convenient pool in the mountain stream where the water is quite still. There is his mirror. He breaks his bottle on a stone and deftly picks out a sharp piece of suitable size. Then he lathers his face profusely and begins to scrape away with his piece of glass, which in his hands works as well as the best steel razor. A cut, or even a slight scratch, is extremely rare as a result of this al fresco form of shaving.—Chicago Times-Herald.

The Larynx.

The larynx has been compared to a wind, a reed and a stringed instrument. The comparison of it to a violin gave rise to the not very accurate phrase "vocal cords," as the name of the two cushions which are its most prominent features. But no string so short as those "vocal cords" could produce a musical bass note. In fact, the comparison of the larynx to any instrument which produces only musical tones is inadequate, to begin with. There is no instrument but the larynx which produces both song and speech, and as those comparisons view the larynx merely as a producer of musical sounds we have no further concern with them at present. Besides, the voice can be trained for speech, elocution and oratory without a knowledge of the physiology of the larynx.

We have the power of adjusting the larynx; of varying the tension of its cords, cushions or ligaments, as they have been variously called. We can do these things without scientific technical knowledge of how they are done, without any knowledge at all of vocal physiology, and it is the work of the trainer of the voice to teach his pupils—or her pupils we may be allowed to say—how to do them.—Chambers' Journal.

The Boy and the Hare.

A pleasant story of the Duke of Devonshire comes from Chatsworth. He was strolling, gun in hand, through one of his own fields near Baslow when he started a hare, which he shot, and was going to pick it up when a small boy jumped out of a neighboring hedge and warned him off. "Here, meester," cried the small boy peremptorily, "yo' must nae touch that."

"Why not?" asked the duke, amused, seeing that he was not recognized.

"Why, it's th' duke's," answered the boy, "an he'll have you locked up if he knows."

"Oh!" said his grace. "Then will you take charge of it?"

"Aye, that I will," answered the boy promptly. "Me faather's a keeper."

Half an hour afterward the boy and the hare arrived in the kitchen at Chatsworth. The duke had taken a short cut home and had the boy brought to him. The little chap was dumb with terror when he learned what a mistake he had made, but the duke gave him a 5 shilling piece, called him "a good lad" and sent him away rejoicing.

Smart Little Girl.

A little girl who has just entered school jubilantly announced to her father that she had beaten all the girls above her in the arithmetic class and gone to the top.

"That was clever of you," said he encouragingly. "How was it?"

"Well, you see, the teacher asked the girl at the head how much was 8 and 5, and she didn't know and said 12, and the next girl said 9, and the next one said 11, and the next one said 14. Such silly answers! Then the teacher asked me, and I said 13, and she told me to go top. 'Course it was 13."

"That was nice," said the father. "I didn't think you could add so well. How did you know it was 13?"

"Why, I guessed it. Nobody said 13."—Pearson's Weekly.

The Libelous "They Say."

The one term "they say" is responsible for nine tenths of the lies which repetition and familiarity finally convert into seemingly bona fide evidence. One usually hears an exciting bit of gossip launched forth with these words, while at the same time the speaker adroitly shields herself by declaring that personally she does not know it to be true. The man or woman who thus screens himself or herself is nothing short of a coward.—Josephine Hill in Woman's Home Companion.

Current Literature.

"You are preparing a new edition of your popular novel," said the caller.

"I am," replied the novelist.

"Well, I have a proposition by which we may both make money. Where you say, 'She glued her lips to his,' why not add, 'using Stycker's celebrated glue?'"—Philadelphia North American.

"De trouble wif some men dat knows a heap," said Uncle Eben, "is dat dey hab sech a positive way o' tellin it dat dey makes folks too mad to listen."—Washington Star.

Flags That No Longer Wave.

Of 35 flags shown in a "flags of all nations" supplement to a London weekly in 1858 11 have disappeared, among them those of the East India company, of the Ionian islands, of Tuscany, Naples, the States of the Church, of the Russian-American company and of Sardinia.

Sickly Creatures.

Jennie—Herbie, it says here another octogenarian's dead. What's an octogenarian?

Herbie—Well, I don't just know what they are, but they must be awfully sickly creatures. You never hear of 'em but they're dying.—Brooklyn Life.

BY VIRTUE OF AN EXECUTION, ISSUED out of the Justice's Court of Fifth Township, County of Inyo, State of California, and to me directed and delivered, for a judgment rendered and entered in said Court, on the 9th day of August, 1897, in favor of J. B. Dover and against L. B. Harrison, I have levied on the following property, to wit: An undivided one-half interest in that certain water right known as the "Vingfield and Harrison" water claim, commencing at a monument of stone on the north side of Jim Cooper's mill-site location and running along said line east forty rods thence north 20 rods, thence west 40 rods, thence south 20 rods to place of beginning. Is at Stone Corral in South Park Mining District, Inyo County, State of California. Also,

An undivided one half interest in that certain mine or mining claim known as the "Myrtle Lode." This claim is located about three miles southeast of South Park Spring, in the cucamonga range of mountains, on the west side of said range, in South Park Mining District, Inyo County, California.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that on the 4th day of February, 1899, at one o'clock p. m. of that day, in front of the Justice's office, in the town of Ballarat, County of Inyo, I will sell all the right title and interest of said L. B. Harrison in and to the above described property, at PUBLIC AUCTION, for cash, gold coin in hand to the highest and best bidder, to satisfy said execution and all costs.

A. M. GIVEN, Sheriff.

Dated the 13th day of January, 1899.
